A Marriage That Didn't Come Off.

A young man on Minnesota street and one of the lady teachers in one of the public schools not far from Case avenue, having conceived that a consolidation of their joys and sorrows would lead to their mutual advantage, resolved that upon the 17th day of July, 1878, at eight o'clock in the evening, they should be joined in holy wedlock. All the arrangements usually called for in a wedding were made, even to the securing of berths in a sleeping car for an eastern trip. The minister and the awful hour of eight p. m. arrived. The couple, with beating hearts and new clothes, presented themselves for the ceremony which was to unite two loving hearts and give him the privilege of paying for her clothes, and her the right to go through his pockets for other women's letters. Then the minister asked to see the license. The young man said he had no license. The preacher said he couldn't marry them without a license. The young man didn't know that license was necessary. He begged the minister to go on. The minister respected the majesty of the law and refused. The bride burst into very unscholastic tears, the groom sobbed and prayed the hard-hearted clergyman to look upon that wedding until and completed the ceremony. The would-be bridegroom thought of the secured berths in the Wagner and entreated him to spare the fatal words, "Twas vain! The man of peace refused to lay himself liable to six months in the Workhouse, and would do naught without the law. Then the would-be bridegroom proposed to go to Judge Tilden, and if he would say it was all right, would the minister marry them? He would. Then the young man hustled around, and ran to the nearest shop to borrow a directory to find the residence of Judge Tilden. Thence he hastened to the Judge's house, leaving the wedding guests in expectancy. All long elapsed, but he was silent and returned; the bride rushed to meet him; the minister cleared his throat; the guests rose in expectation. With a dejected air he sank into a seat and mopped the sweat from his brow.

"What did he say?" all ejaculated anxiously. "He said: 'Come around in the morning and I'll give you the best license in the house.' Just as if a man could get married any time of day."

The bride was carried off by sympathizing friends, the bridegroom sank into the depths of gloomy reflections, the minister pulled his hat over his ear and went home, and the 10:30 train pulled out of the Union Depot with two less passengers than the schedule called for.—Cleveland Herald.

—It seems that Speaker Randall is one of the largest landowners in the United States, if a correspondent of the World is not mistaken. Writing about the title of the West Virginia land sold for taxes a few days ago, he says: "Mr. Swann, a Massachusetts capitalist, lent large sums of money to Virginia during the Revolutionary War. He received in liquidation of the State's indebtedness to him a great land grant, which he located in Southwestern Virginia and in Eastern Kentucky. These lands lie partly within the boundaries of McDowell County, and of the original survey all that now remains in the State of West Virginia is an estate of 1,360,000 acres, belonging not to an obscure and unknown person such as the vendee in the late tinder sale in New York, who only acquired his assumed title in April of this present year, but to a well-known and distinguished gentleman than Mr. Samuel J. Randall, the Speaker of the present House of Representatives."

A PUNSTER challenged a sick man's vote at a city election on the ground that he was an ill legal voter.

GRANSIE.

A grand old man.
Built after the olden plan;
A mosquito bar, a massive head,
A man to raise the hinges he lives,
A man to murder a sing dog I.
I wish you might see him
Sit back at his ease
(Awake or asleep as you please),
While he whirls, and he whirls,
And I read him the news.

Who's killed Bosby?
He asks in his amused way;
And what have they stolen this time, my lad?
The roads, they tidy'er like pudgy in person—
Bad works, hey, lad—very bad?
Then for that ludicrous speck of the eye
While the pine gets a slide
To the other side,
Where he pulls it and packs,
Keeping up with the axe.

A character!
When he begins "I tell ye, sir"—
He walks in his shirt-sleeves, and uses modern talk;
Thus the science after his "say?"
The schemes made of a walk
And hanging of lids once.
You may put it down
When you see that brow
And the fun gins to play
He's almost to settle some subject forever.

He's so complete
From his head to his feet,
Insane and sad so none to keep!
There's a sort of a finish to the top rest;
He makes you laugh and he makes you weep;
He spells the length of your soul;
He softens the tough
And levels the rough
As he coaxes and smokes
And preaches and jokes.

His children and wife
Have gone to the better life,
And just a companion is left;
But he says, "They've only the start—that's all.

And you never would think him bereft
He wears the calmest face on the farm,
And with a genuine stamper joy
Often declares he's "young as a boy!"
Still he smiles and he smokes
Between sermons and jokes.

A grand old man,
Built after the olden plan;
A mosquito bar, a massive head,
A man to raise the hinges he lives,
A man to murder a sing dog I.
Years yet may he timber his cricks,
His peerless old soul of the past;
And may I be the last
While he whirls and he whirls,
To listen, or read him the news.

MRS. BARNEY'S SCHEMS.

Strangely enough the cellar-stairs preceded it as they contributed that very important part—the application. Sister Searls had furnished the text in the morning, then the sermon might have gone on from firstly to fourthly—eventually without Mrs. Barney's notice, had it not been for the cellar stairs.

Mrs Barney was hurried that day—she was always hurried—and it was warm and uncomfortable in the sunshiny stove-heated kitchen, where she was hastening to and fro, and growing fretted and irritated without knowing the special. Neale, standing at the ironing-table, was tired also.

"There's no need to do," she said, wearily. "I don't see why we need to do baking and ironing both in one day. It makes such a crowd, and we could have left one for the morrow."

"To-morrow will bring work enough of its own," answered Mrs. Barney, quickly. "Besides, I'm getting the work all out of the way the first of the week, a whole day to rest in would be worth something."

"But you shouldn't take it for resting just because it would be a whole day, and something else could be crowded into it," murmured Neale, to whom one hour now looked very inviting and that possible day in the future very uncertain.

The mother did not answer and the young girl's hand moved more slowly over the damp muslins as her gaze wandered away to the hills where great trees were throwing cool shadows. How pleasant the shade and greenness were! The desire to bring it nearer suggested another thought to Neale.

"Some vines would be so nice at this window, mother, I could plant them if you would let Tim dig a little spot out there."

"Yes, but if we ever get the house fixed up because we want it, we shall have pleasanter views at that window."

"But we don't know when we can do that, and the vines would be so pretty now," urged Neale.

"Pretty? Well, yes, if we had the yard turf trimmed and laid out in order, and the shrubs and flowers in their places; but a stray vine here and there seems hardly worth fussing over when we can't have the whole done."

Neale sighed, but was silent, and presently Tim came in with an armful of wood.

"Neale," he said, pausing near her table, "if you'd just sew this seam up a little. The old thing tears awful easy, and I just like it against a nail."

He spoke low, but Mrs. Barney's quick ears caught the words.

"That jacket torn again, Tim! I never saw such a boy to tear things to pieces! No, Neale can't stop to mend it now, and I can't either. I've been intending to get you a new one, but there doesn't seem much chance to make anything new while you contrive to make so much patching and darning on the old."

Mrs. Barney shut the oven door with a snap. Tim was the hired boy, kind-hearted but careless, and he was raiser discouraging. Board and clothing at one times appeared to her a high price for his services. "Hurry now, and pick some currants for dinner," she said.

Tim took the tin-pail pointed out to him, but did not hurry as he passed with clouded face down the walk. The thought of a new jacket would have been pleasant a few minutes before, but it had suddenly lost its attractiveness.

The boy drew his lanky brows into a scowl, and, as soon as he was out of sight of the house, threw himself upon the grass and began his current picking in a very leisurely style. Then it was that Sister Searls drove up in her rattling old buggy, with a horse that was, as Tim said, "a reg'lar old revolutionary pensioner."

"If I can't have fun horses and carriages I can take a deal of comfort with these," was always Sister Searl's cheery comment upon her equipage. She had an appeal at Mrs. Barney's and had stopped on her way to the village. A plump, rosy-faced little woman she was, not young, only that she belonged to the class of people who never grow old; neatly dressed, though it was but that old poplin made over, Mrs. Barney wondering a little that she should have taken the trouble, when she surely needed a new one.

"This room is too warm to ask anyone to sit in," she said, philosophically, placing a chair for her caller just outside the door. "When we are able to have the new addition to our house, I shall not have a stove herein summer."

"In the meanwhile you have this cool, shady porch. What a pleasant place it is," said Sister Searls, admiringly.

"Yes, if one had time to enjoy it," answered Mrs. Barney, with an uneasy little laugh. "I'm so hurried, trying to get everything about the place in just the right order, that I don't have time."

"Take time, Sister Barney, take time!" said Mrs. Searls, smiling, but earnestly. "Make the most of what you have while you are working for something better. Don't crowd out any little sweetness you have to make room for some great pleasure that's farther off. You see," she added, blushing a little, as if her words needed excuse, "it's something I had to learn myself, years ago—never to trample on duties in a wild chase after the roses. The roses I haven't found, but my desire to have been enough to make the path bright."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the loaves of bread in the oven, and the other part did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what any sort of a flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives, even if they are only country ministers' wives, hear so much talk that it comes natural to them. Bits out of old garment, like as anyway. Dear me! I don't get much time for poetry in my life! I'm sure of that. How Tim does loiter!"

Tim, meanwhile, had sauntered out from among the bushes, and was engaged in whistling the old horse that Mrs. Searls had fastened as securely as if it could be induced under any circumstances to run. It was moved to this out of gallantry, partly because he really liked the cheery little woman, and partly because he heard Mrs. Barney call, and was in no haste to go to the house.

"That will do, thank you, Tim," said Sister Searls, nervously anxious to expedite his steps in the way of obedience. "I think Mrs. Barney is calling you."

"I'm; she most always is," answered Tim, philosophically, pausing to arrange the harness with painful deliberation.

"But, my dear boy," urged Sister Searls, rending something in the knitted brows, "you really should try to please her and her all you can, you know. She is kind to you."

"Oh yes, she's kind! Only when I get into a scrape she's always ready to dodge; it generally hits a fellow hard enough to be uncomfortable," responded Tim. The morning relieved his feelings by this statement, and his countenance pricked him slightly, and he added:

"You see she's always in such a hurry. She can't come and bring 'em; she has to pitch 'em."

Mrs. Searls meditated as she drove down the country road.

"Well, I never thought of that before, but I do suppose that's why the Bible speaks of the Lord's 'loving-kindness' and 'tender mercies'—because there's so much kindness in the world that isn't one bit loving, and so much mercy that is very hard and not tender-ness. I'll tell Josiah that." For it happened that while the good minister pored over his books and studied theology, his wife, going here and there, studied humanity. And though he cooked his own sermons, his wife often seasoned them. The baking was done at last, the currants picked, and Mrs. Barney's dinner ready.

"For the country bestowed upon us may we be duly grateful," murmured Mr. Barney, with head bowed low over his plate. Then he looked up and remarked that he was tired of a steady diet of ham and eggs, and didn't see why they couldn't have a little variety.

"You would see if you had to cook in the hot kitchen, as I do," responded Mrs. Barney, more shortly than her wont. "I'm glad to have whatever I can get most quickly and easily. When we have a summer-kitchen we can begin to live as other people do."

"If we ain't all had as Methuselem," complained Master Tommy, in an undertone which was perfectly audible.

"Anyway, the chickens will be if we can't have any cooked till that time." He had sniffed the odors of the baking on his homeward way from school, and, settling his juvenile mind upon chicken-pie for dinner, had been grievously disappointed.

Warm and weary with the morning's work, the questions and suggestions fretted Mrs. Barney. She felt wounded and aggrieved, too, as she moved about silently after dinner. No one seemed to see that she cared as much for things nice and comfortable as did the others, she said to herself. She cared far more, indeed, since she was willing to do without much now, and work and plan for the sake of having things all that could be desired by-and-by. How many present comforts and conveniences she had foregone for that! Those dusty cellar stairs, toward whose dark fortuous steps she was tending, were an example; they could scarcely be more filly-built, or in a more inconvenient place. Mr. Barney had wanted to remove them; but she would not allow him to incur the expense because a second removal might be necessary when the house was thoroughly rearranged. No, she had preferred to submit to the discomfort all this time, while she meditated an insecure board slipped beneath her feet, plunging her down the narrow stairway against the tough stone wall, and then upon the hard floor of the cellar. One swift moment of horror, the loss of dishes that fell from her hands, a flash of excruciating pain, and then she knew nothing more. She did not hear Neatie's wild cry from the room above, nor see her husband's pale face as he lifted her in his arms.

When she returned to consciousness a strange voice—the physician's—was saying:

"No bones broken, though it's a wonder her neck wasn't, falling in the way she did."

Slowly she opened her eyes upon a confused mingling of anxious faces, wet cloths and bottles of vinegar and camphor, and gradually she comprehended what had happened, and her own condition—not dangerously injured, but bruised and lamed, with a sprained ankle that would keep her a prisoner for some days at least. It was a sudden pause in her busy work—an enforced rest. She scarcely knew how to bear it for a moment, as she remembered all she had planned to do, until a second shuddering thought suggested that she might have left it all forever; then she grew patient and thankful.

It seemed strange to be quietly lying on the lounge in the best room, the room that had been kept so carefully closed to preserve the furniture until an addition to the house should transmute it into a back parlor; to watch the quiet doctor only a spectator, while Neatie flitted to and fro in the kitchen beyond, spreading the table for tea.

How good the children were that evening, and how thoughtful her husband was, coming to her side again and again to talk or read to her! They had not found much time for talking or reading together those late years, she and David; she had always been so busy in the house, he about the house. She had dreamed of a leisure time coming, though, when they should have many hours together, except the illness or accident coming to one alone, or of death suddenly ending them. But it flashed upon her now how many loving hours they had missed unconsciously and had been crowded out of their home and in that brief retrospective glance she understood the meaning and the earnestness of Sister Searls' counsel.

"Why its all kind of real nice and jolly—if you wasn't hurt," declared Tommy, unable to repress his enjoyment of the pretty room, and the unusual family gathering any more clearly.

Tears gathered in the mother's eyes, but she had found her clue and meant to follow it. She had ample time for thought in the days that followed, when she was only able to sew a little, now and then, on garments for Tim, or knit new socks for Neatie's vinegaring, and slowly but surely she learned her lesson, and brought it back to her husband's quiet, continuous earnestness as God sends his sunshine—day by day.—Kate W. Hamilton, in Interior.

A Diplomatist's Dilemma.

The Deputy X——— was recently elected for one of the richest departments in the northwest, triumphing over a certain M. D——, who had been invalidated. The person who secured the victory of X——— was none other than the unlucky M. D——. Shortly after the election the uncle committed suicide, and the clergy, who had always found in him a determined adversary, refused to allow his body to be buried in consecrated ground. X——, on learning this was greatly troubled; he wished at all hazards to avoid the scandal of a civil interment. It occurred to him that the best thing he could do would be to get the doctor of the locality to sign a certificate to the effect that the deceased had long been non compos mentis. The doctor made no objection, and X——— took the certificate to the cure, who ordered the church doors to be thrown open, and M. D., senior, was buried in Christian ground. The will was then opened, and it was found that the defunct had left all his property to the Deputy X——; but the nephew is going to contest the validity of the instrument on the ground that his uncle was out of his mind when he signed it. The question is what will X——— do? Will he let the millions slip through his fingers, or will he acknowledge the fraud to which he resorted in order to secure Christian burial for his protector.—Paris Figaro.

OUR RADIA LETTER.

...among the sick children and over weary mothers. To me this seems the most touching and beautiful of all the floral charades, and I am firmly convinced that it is by no means the least useful. To most of the recipients a basket of flowers is like an angel's visit—only for amity, but for the pleasure it confers; and to the poor woman for instance, who comes to the counter for medicine, and who in addition to this relief can carry home with her a fresh bunch of fresh and fragrant flowers, these last have often as much of healing as the physician's remedy. In Paris an association has already distributed this season nearly 50,000 bouquets, and something like 1,000 potted flowers.

Readers of New York papers may remember the short lived produced about the time last year by Jay Gould's being thrown over a railing into a wall street basement by a student collision of Gould and Indiana troops. Now Mr. ... celebrating the anniversary of that little affair by getting himself into a more serious trouble. He has been for some weeks at the head of a dozen or "bulls" who have been trying to force certain stocks up to fictitious quotations. Report now says that the job was too big for even the wily Jay to handle, and that he is now in a very tight place financially. The king of the street however has many lives as a cat, and I shall be greatly surprised if the predictions heavily made on Gould's downfall are not entirely falsified within a few days.

The two most distinguished arrivals here this week were Smid and Bechtig, two boys apprenticed, who were captured in the Upper Nile region some months ago, and have lately come over here to replace the young hippopotamus who was for some time one of the chief attractions of the Aquarium, but who shuffled off his mortal coil last spring. The newcomers weigh about 250 pounds apiece, and are the only pair of these animals, male and female, now in captivity.

Our weather here has been run under the auspices of Jupiter Pluvius for a week past. Where oh the rain comes from is beyond conjecture but roughly estimating from appearances I should say that about forty feet had fallen since my last writing over in that wicked city of Brooklyn; they have been having glorious times there turned into creeks and their cellars to cisterns. No very heavy damage to property reported.

THE INVESTIGATION.

On the 24th, Representative Kelley was examined, and detailed the circumstances attending his visit to New Orleans in 1876. He went there merely as a looker-on and to see that nothing improper occurred. He had talked with Packard three days before he left. On arriving at New Orleans he found there Senator Sherman and other visiting statesmen, and also a number of distinguished Democrats. A committee of the latter addressed a communication to the Republicans, proposing a participation in the business of the Returning Board; but the latter declined. Witness said the Republicans never interfered with the action of the Board, and never discussed the question of the propriety of such interference. Witness attributed being called to that position of Weber's last name where he stated that the Returning Board were influenced by the visiting statesmen, to recent threats, he said that his testimony was unqualifiedly false. The general character of the witness was unassailable, and some of it was most abhorrent. He heard the testimony of John Pickston and believed it to be true. If she testified falsely, then the witness had cut a brilliant ornament. Witness had never heard of any suggestion to manufacture returns forthwith; never, and never heard that fictitious officials were used, had never seen a fictitious list now offered, and made no connection with Anderson or Anderson's way to him at the Treasury Department in March last, and giving an account of the conversation as noted at the time by the Secretary's stenographer. He denied Anderson's account of that interview upon oath. Mr. Sherman authorized, in reply to the question, a letter written by him to Gov. Hayes, in which he mentioned the subject of the Louisiana and Hayes election over theirs. With reference to Weber's testimony, Mr. Sherman further said that he was never at any time, writing at the desk in the New Orleans headquarters, that Weber could and have seen him write as he had sworn. There was no examination and no falsification or manipulation of his statements for political purposes; and he had never known Mr. Banks to suppress any letter written by him. He had never even talked with her except in the presence of others, and had never offered her any money for anything she had done or was to do. In relation to the appointment of sundry witnesses before the Committee, Mr. Sherman said he would not hesitate to appoint Democrats. Mr. Butler had done his duties, then. Butler asked for an examination of the name of the counsel of Postmaster Parker, of New Orleans, Smither, late of Mr. Butler, but Mr. Sherman declined that he was not bound to reveal Cabinet secrets and declined to answer the question.

Gen. Garfield testified as to how he came to go to New Orleans. He said he was made referee by the late D. A. Weber for information relative to the Parish of West Feliciana than to any one else. He (Weber) told him that the whole trouble there was founded on the suppressions of the Democratic State Committee, without the formation of rolls claim to show that there was physical as well as moral force in the movement. Witness went to the truth of R. L. Weber's testimony in regard to the suppression and defeat of the visiting Republicans. There was not a word of truth in the statement that they advised the Returning Board to stretch their powers to the utmost extent with a view to defeat Democratic votes. In answer to a question by Gen. Butler, witness stated that he had been elected Governor Louisiana. Gen. Garfield said he understood that Hayes's friends had put to prevent a conflict between the houses of Congress, and to prevent bloodshed, and preserve the unity of a Legislature in a right to turn out a Governor, and that he had been told by Mr. Butler, whom Mr. Garfield replied that there was a difference.

Mr. Sherman was recalled on the 25th, and testified that he had seen Mr. Sherman's signature, and thought he could recognize it. The Sherman letter shown him by Weber he thought was in Sherman's handwriting. In reply to a question by Mr. Potter, witness stated that the allegations of fraud and intimidation were not made until after election. The Democrats in Louisiana concluded that co-ed votes according to the New York plan—they bought them.

Ex-Congressman Morey testified that there was no ballot-during in Madison Parish. He had heard of the Pinkston case. Her affidavit was taken by Weber, one of the visiting statesmen. She was under no influence to tell an untruth, and witness believed she stated what she thought to be the truth. His work of getting evidence was done in the Custom-House, and was under the supervision of the visiting statesmen. Witness saw Lou Weber in New Orleans frequently. Witness declined to answer a question in regard to the assassination of Dr. Langston, assigning as a reason that deponent was his friend, and he was then engaged in investigating the circumstances of the murder with a view to the punishment of the murderers, and it he told what he knew the cause of justice might be defeated. Witness said the Republicans were greatly dissatisfied with Packard's nomination; he himself and many other assistants would have brought out a much larger vote in support of the ticket. Regarding the political meetings about two weeks when Gilbert Carter was killed, most of the murders left the parish. No one but Gilbert Carter and witness knew that he was left for Carter said the white folks had a club and had decided to colonize people, and proposed to get up a club and ballulize them. Witness saw white men riding in the road, but they never pestered him.

Judge Bonard testified, giving an account of the organization of Democrats in Feliciana for the last campaign, organized colored clubs and addressed meetings. The organization of the Deputies subdivided the municipality for organization; the object was to prevent stealing; the organization led to excesses, and for that reason was disbanded; the acts of the Regulators were, of course, outside of law.

MAJ. E. A. BURKE was examined, on the 26th. He stated that he was sent to Washington in January, 1877, by Gov. Nicholls to represent the interests of the State before the commission the McVeigh Commission came there. The Commission consisted of a majority of agents for the Packard (government). The majority court in session on the 8th of January was appointed by Gov. Kellogg, and nominated by Packard, the Senate, they met in pursuance of law on the 8th of January, and adjourned sine die out of respect to the memory of one of the City Judges, and never met together again, so the conference was taken possession of to the push that same day. None of the members ever suggested the subject that Packard had no legal title as governor. The Democratic members wished to note his legal position or effect a compromise. It disclaimed any agency except to accept the decision of the very tribunals at that time elected the Packard Legislature were being forced to decide the Nicholls controversy.

EX-CONGRESSMAN MOREY was recalled, on the 27th, and said he believed there would have been no trouble in maintaining the Packard (government in Louisiana had it been recognized as Kellogg's was, and had the President given it moral support and recognition. Witness had advised the President that the withdrawal of troops from Louisiana and the consequent overthrow of the Packard (government would be the destruction of the Republican party, there. The President had told him that all the troops from forts could no longer maintain that position which they were then occupying, and that he could not send troops to the South. He had also said that he could not do so far as he knew to restore order in Louisiana, Congress refused to make appropriations and provide for the payment of the troops. Witness had a conversation with Gen. Sheridan in regard to the Louisiana matter, and Sheridan said that he could not send troops to the South. He had also said that he could not do so far as he knew to restore order in Louisiana, Congress refused to make appropriations and provide for the payment of the troops. Witness had a conversation with Gen. Sheridan in regard to the Louisiana matter, and Sheridan said that he could not send troops to the South. He had also said that he could not do so far as he knew to restore order in Louisiana, Congress refused to make appropriations and provide for the payment of the troops.

THE LOUISIANA SUB-COMMITTEE.

JUDGE WILLIAM R. WHITAKER and John Douglass testified, on the 28th, regarding the signatures on the second set of Electoral certificates, that in each case the name of the witness was written prior to that of Sheldon, and in one case the name of Sheldon was written subsequent to that of Johnson.

Dubuclet was introduced to show that Judge Morris Marks was in New Orleans on the day the second set of Electoral certificates were signed.

Thomas H. Nelson testified that in 1876 he assisted in the preparation of affidavits in the Conservation case, in thereto during the election. He had been in New Orleans during the summer of 1876, and had been left off; he said it made no difference, as there were for the State at large; he talked to Kellogg, Packard and Dibble about it three or four days after election; they said they would use the State by it; there was no intimidation in or about the eye. It has, however, changed the color of the eyeball, which is of a lighter shade than that of the right eye, and has affected the sight somewhat. The snake was first discovered about two months ago, when it was much smaller than it is now. How it came in the horse's eye is a question which puzzles scientists.—Penn Yan (N. Y.) Express.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

The Baltimore Gazette says of a well-known peripatetic journalist: "His word is so good that it is a bond to the contrary of what he says."

—President Hayes has received a letter from "a Virginian," who no doubt is crazy, saying that unless he receives $200,000 from the White-House he will go there and assassinate Mr. Hayes.

Two thousand dollars is a moderate price to pay for an honorable immortality, yet this is the sum by which Kilbo Yale gave his name to the most noted of American colleges.

—Gen. Frank Williams, Postmaster of Stonington, Conn., has held that position ur that of Deputy Postmaster there for fifty-two years, except for a short time while he was traveling in Europe.

—Mr. William Wertenbaker, librarian of the University of Virginia, is eighty years old, and is said to have held that post for fifty-two years, his appointment having been signed by Thomas Jefferson.

—Mr. Charles E. Stowe, the son of Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, has just been licensed to practice law in the Connecticut Bar Association. He is said to be clever, is a graduate of Harvard, and has studied at home.

—An eccentric man in Canton, Conn., who is seventy-five years old, has ordered that when he dies his horse, now eighteen years old, shall be killed, as the old gentleman says he could not rest in peace if he thought the faithful beast was in danger of being abused.

—Senator Bruce (colored) is said to have driven out, in his bachelor days, in a coupe with a white driver. He is popular with his brother Senators. His wealth was acquired not, like that of most negroes who make money, from the menial occupations, but from planting in Mississippi.—N. Y. Post.

—An autopsy on the body of Dr. J. C. Ayer, the millionaire pill-vender shows that the brain was inflamed, the convolutions shrunken and yellowed, and the coverings thick and clouded, with general congestion of the membranes and tissues of the brain, a phenomenal condition of the blood, and a general paresis, from which he had long suffered. The bones of the skull were much thinned on the sides, and the arteries were hardened, obstructing the blood circulation; but the brain weighed fifty-three ounces, four or five ounces above the average.

The Indians are nearly all Catholic people composed the aborigines and impressed upon them their customs and religion, we are not at all surprised to find ourselves visits most their years by centuries.

So perfect is religious teaching here according to the New Testament that one walks not in spirit, but in body; not in imagination, but by immediate perception. He walks the streets with his disciples, preaches in the temple, is brought before Pilate, tried, condemned, is made to bear his cross, enters the city on an ass and is crucified between two thieves. From the head, and finally ascends to Heaven. I have not yet seen him go up to Heaven, but the good people here assure me that they have no honorable immortality, yet this is the sum by which Kilbo Yale gave his name to the most noted of American colleges.

John Chinaman and the Boat.

At a shoe store in San Francisco: The persons concerned were the proprietor of the store and a John Chinaman. Examining a pair of boots, price five dollars, the latter says in his usual way: "How muchee you axes for bootee?" in a spirit of wagery, it is presumable, the proprietor answered: "Seventy-five a halfee, John. Very cheap bootee, sixtee?" "Cheapee bootee," said John, who thereupon examined a pair, costing eight dollars and inquired the number. "But," said the dealer in leath r, "this is only enough for one boat. They are too small for you." Fifty cents apiece: two boats cost five dollars." John was somewhat astonished, and he could not long resist the demanded the return of his money; but that the dealer was inexorable. "No John," said the latter, "you have got one boat and paid for it; now give me aged as to create a tendency toward better seed with each generation, and now is the time to begin.

Select first from the largest stool, because the chances are that, with a good many heads together, the fertilization was from the same plant, and as the plant itself is a good one, in choosing from it the promise is for a good resultant. By going through a whole field, in a little while one can secure the cream of the field, which, if planted by itself another year, and perhaps the short heads and poor roots taken out, will certainly give a quantity of seed that will increase very materially the produce of an acre. Every farmer can go at work upon crossing wheat artificially, with success. This requires peculiar kindness and skill; but not more but ran, by using his best judgment in selecting, increase the value, in three years, of crop by 25 and perhaps 50 per cent. This is no theoretical estimate; it has been tested and found to work.

We wish also to suggest, in this connection, that in preparing for a grain-show at the State and county fairs, let a good bundle of the grain be shown, not a single handful of a dozen heads, but a generous bunch, showing head and stalk, in connection with the sheaf of grain in the sheaf of straw. In passage, the approach of such a load always wake me from my slumbers. The noise resembled distant thunder.

On Thursday, at noon, the President of the Republic visited the cathedral to worship, and remained one hour. He was received with the military with arms reversed, drums and bugles draped in heavy mourning, the music being funeral.

On Friday, at two p. m., came the nailing to the cross in the cathedral. At the same time the bells of all the churches tolled solemnly to indicate that the hour had come, and simultaneously every residence of those who could afford it was draped in the windows and doors in deep mourning, and so they remained until Sunday, or the day of the resurrection. From the steeples of every church floated black flags at half mast.

After the crucifixion scene on Friday, at five p. m., the body was taken down, and then began the greatest procession of the occasion, when the body was taken from the cathedral to another church, half a mile distant, in great solemnity.—Cor. N. Y. Observer.

This little book is the best in use for beginners in the study of Arithmetic. It is a combination of Table Book, Dictionary, and Arithmetic, and is the only book of the kind ever published. FILER FOR CONGRESS.

Detroit, Filer, of Ludington—one of the pioneers of that locality, who managed to make some money in the lumber business—wants to go to Congress. During the past fortnight, he and a few henchmen have been scouring the Lower Peninsula portion of the Ninth District, industriously trying to work up enthusiasm for Filer, and "fix things" for him. Mr. Filer was an aspirant once before—when Mr. Hubbell was nominated the first time Hon. S. C. Moffatt, of Traverse City, was also candidate before the same convention. Mr. Filer was chairman of the Congressional Committee that called that convention, and through some mysterious and unheard of gerrymandering in apportioning delegates, several new counties (which were known to favor Moffatt), were given but half a vote each. When a test of strength came in the convention the fact was disclosed that if those new counties had been given one full vote each, which they should have had, Mr. Moffatt would have been nominated. After a protracted struggle, embracing some 25 or 30 ballots, Mr. Hubbell was nominated. After Mr. Hubbell had made a brief speech, accepting the nomination and expressing thanks for the same, the defeated aspirants—Messrs. Moffatt, of Traverse City, Burt, of Marquette, Dr. Ellis, of Manistee, and Filer, of Ludington were successively called out. All except Mr. Filer expressed their acquiescence in the choice of the convention, and promised the ticket their cordial and hearty support. Mr. Filer made no speech, but said the action of the convention put him in mind of a story; and then he related a decidedly amusty anecdote, which was not only in bad taste, disclosing a mal vanst of refinement in one who should presume to aspire to a seat in Congress but which could be construed in no other way than as exceedingly discourteous to the convention. Before adjournment, a resolution was adopted declaring that in all future conventions, every organized county should be entitled to at least one delegate with one full vote. This was done to prevent a recurrence of the gerrymandering practiced by Filer's committee.

The PIONEER-MARKET expressed a preference for the renomination of Mr. Hubbell some time ago, and that is our position to day. While there may be scores of men in the District whose ability is equal to that of Mr. Hubbell, they lack acquaintance at the National Capital, and are entirely wanting in that experience which enables Mr. Hubbell to work understandingly and effectively from the opening day of the session, and to accomplish more for his District and State than two new men could, be they ever so brilliant. In private business affairs, prudent and discreet managers employ those who are most competent and faithful in their performance of the particular work required and when they get such a man, they keep him as long as possible, instead of discharging him as soon as he thoroughly familiar with his duties, and employing another who has them all to learn. Mr. Hubbell's ability, force of character and extended experience, render him decidedly preferable to a new man, particular at this time unusual vigilance is necessary to guard the nation against the schemings and plottings of those but recently in open rebellion against the Government.

For any thing you want go to See & Washburn's.

THE editor of the Traverse Bay Eagle in all his comments upon positions taken by the SENTINEL, has something to say regarding the Charlevoix Postoffice. The matter is obvious. Since 1876 there has been photographed upon the spectrum of Sprague's political eye, the outlines of something closely resembling a Land office or Postoffice. After several flounders after the reality he has finally been forced to content himself with this ocular substitute. As the lowees and fishes are the Alpha and Omega of his politics, so he thinks they are the beginning and ending of everybody else' Political creed. The SENTINEL proposes to rise above these considerations, and will always be found upon the right side, patriotic or no postoffice.

—A. E. Hayes is building a new store.

—A drug store will probably be put up here this fall.

—A Presbyterian Society was organized here on the 11th of this month.

GEORGE MILLER, of this place, is puffed up in the fullness of his pride. There appeared at his residence one day last week, an eight pound girl. George is loud in his praises of its hereditary goodness, beauty, etc., but persists in calling it "the."

—Quarterly Meeting—the last in this conference year—will be held next Sabbath in the Methodist church.

—Rev. Mr. Whitman has been attending camp meeting at Northport during past week.

THE LECTURER.—The lecture of Mrs. Boise Sunday evening, on the subject of temperance, was well attended. Charlevoix is the wrong town for temperance lectures, and little, or no interest was manifested.

—The lecture by Rev. P. E. Kittridge on "Luck and Pluck," on Tuesday evening, at the M. E. Church, is spoken of by nearly all who heard it as per excellence. It was full of fine thoughts, and delivered in a masterly manner.

THE Odd Fellows of Charlevoix have leased the upper portion of the store building belong to Mr. Frances, and intend to have it fitted up as a lodge room.

THE view of the Resort grounds from the village, and vice versa, is badly obstructed by a lot of worthless dead hemlock trees near the bayou, which should be cleaned out for the benefit of all concerned.

COLLINS the Charlevoix meat market will receive a lot of sheep this week, and our folks will be well supplied with mutton.

HON. Henry W. Lord, of the State Board of Commissioners of Penal, Pauper and Reformatory Institutions, formally inspected our jail Saturday.

THE gospel ship Glad Tidings, commanded by Rev. Capt. Bundy, came into port on Tuesday, and went up South Arm, where the Christian mariner has held up to this writing, several interesting meetings. Capt. Bundy was recently ordained a Congregational minister and has full powers to exercise the functions of a minister of the gospel.

A Danger Threatening.

On the 28th of this month the Republican Representative Convention meets in this place. Its duty will be to select from among the few candidates for the office of Representative in the State Legislature a man who, by virtue of moral and political rectitude, will ensure victory. A want in the delegates who shall compose that Convention:

We wish to here record a warning against an impending danger to Republicanism in this District. We solemnly warn the Convention against demagoguery and "personal claims." We caution the Convention not to put in nomination a man whose personal and political record will not bear the closest scrutiny. We caution them against giving us a candidate whose profession and sympathies are not in full accord with the interests of the people of this District.

The Convention here at in their power to unwittingly elect a Democrat. Will they take this responsibility. A candidate unincumbered by any past political blunders, and possessing the political and business confidence of the Republican voters of the District is the only one that can be elected, under existing circumstances.

We utter these notes of warning, and ask their serious consideration by the personnel of the Convention. If our exactitude touches the aspiring ambition of any near home, we will accept the result in the true Christian spirit of self denial. Steer clear of the rocks!

MAINE.—L. D. Bartholomew, of this place, has traded his schooner, the Len Higby, for the square-topsail scow Seppig, giving $900 difference. The Seppig is a staunch vessel, seven years old, and will carry 50 cords of wood. Capt. Gebo will sail her.

—Quite a fleet of vessels were detained here with their cargoes, for several days last week, by head winds. Friday the wind shifted, however, and they left.

—The propeller Fountain City had 126 passengers on her up trip last week. This testifies to the popularity of the steamer and her commander.

DEXTER & NOBLE, Elk Rapids, pay highest market price in cash for wheat and other grain. All representations that we pay in due-bills is false, as we never bought a bushel of grain in that way, and do not intend to.

SCHOOL.—The Charlevoix School Board have employed Prof. F. W. Mayne, of St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. as Principal of our School for the ensuing year. Prof. Mayne is a graduate of one of the New York State Normal Schools, and has the best of recommendations. Miss Lottie B. Ainslie, of this village, will conduct the Primary Department.

THE HANNAH WORK.—Capt. R. S. Dale, of Chicago, the contractor for the Charevoix harbor work, arrived here Sunday. He proposes to enter at once, and energetically, into the work and to leave every dollar of the money, except his margin, with the people here. To this end, he will sub let the timber work, and furnish employment to as many of our mechanics and laborers as he can advantageously handle. Capt. Dale is a veteran in harbor work, having followed it many years. He built the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, and has received therefor from the Government, up to date, $450,000. He has, in addition to our harbor the contract for the work at Grand Haven and Frankfort. We are satisfied that our harbor work is in good hands.

THE State Teachers' Institute for the counties of Antrim and Charlevoix will be held at the Blakely school house, near the head of Torch Lake, during the week commencing Sept. 9. The people in the neighborhood offer free board to all teachers in attendance.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, AUG. 20, - - 1878.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Aug. 16, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

We have been regarded during the past week with an introduction to the workings of the Congressional Labor Committee, of whom the Hon. A. S. Hewitt, of this city, is the chairman, and Messrs Rice of Massachusetts, Hoyd of Illinois, and Thompson of Pennsylvania, the constituent members. Had Congress given these gentlemen a vacation, and instructed them to stop in New York and witness or take part in a farce, the instruction could not have been more fully developed and realized than it was when they issued a general invitation to all classes to appear before them, and give their views as to the causes of the existing depression, and to suggest measures for its relief. Those who have thus far aired themselves, have as a general thing been Utopians, in the fullest meaning of the word. Communists, Socialists, Womens' Rights men and women, Spiritualists, long haired reformers of every kind, all have given those gentlemen to understand that they are the masters of the situation and that it is only by their sovereign will that Congress or the Government is permitted to exist. Under their propositions there is to be or would be a general millenium. Property is to be equally divided. The man who works and saves is to have no more than he who idles and spends, and Government is to act the part of a patriarchal parent and see to everything. Government is to run the railroads, telegraphs, and all other works now carried on by companies. Government is to employ everybody, pay everybody, hold everything in trust for everybody, but above all things, Government is to a strictly honest pops; no more Credit Mobiliers; no more subsidizing railroad, telegraph or steamboat companies. There is to be but one general christian brotherhood, under which all will act in concert, and every man will take his neighbor by the hand, call him brother, and divide his substance with him. The most amusing feature that this cold and unfeeling world which does not sympathize with these visionary views encounters, is the extreme pertinacity which these same Utopians hold on the little worldly pelf in their possession. Even that extreme communist and socialist, Justus H Schwab, will not give a suffering brother a glass of beer without the necessary quid pro quo in the shape of a five cent piece.

I hope that we shall not soon be involved in a war which would enable us to use our new style of submarine weapons, but if we should happen to become so involved, I think we could show a thing or two to any men-of-war which might seek to invade the harbor of New York. Major General Abbott, of the regular army, has been busy for a week experimenting with some new torpedoes at Willard's Point, and the results of these have been to prove that the heaviest vessels may be blown into the air at a moment's warning. A large number of torpedoes were exploded at different depths and under various conditions, the effects in each case being carefully noted for future reference. The final experiment was the blowing up of a 200 ton schooner in the presence of a large number of spectators. The scene on this occasion reminded one of the memorable blowing up of Hell Gate. The torpedo, containing a hundred pounds of powder, was sunk beneath the vessel and connected by an electric wire the station on shore. When all was in readiness, Gen. Abbott touched the key, and immediately there was a violent commotion of the water under the schooner. She snapped asunder as if made of pasteboard, with a loud, deep report, her timbers were torn as if they were straws, and a confused mass of water, planks, fragments of wood, black dust, and a volume of smoke, through which darted a large red globe of fire, was hurled up to a height of at least 100 feet. For a moment the whole mass balanced in the air and then fell. All that remained of the schooner was the top of the cabin deck. Of the remainder of the vessel no two planks were left together. Photography was called in to record the experiment, several instantaneous views of the explosion being obtained in its different stages.

That was an odd robbery that startled the few dwellers in Vesey street last week, and which still remains an impenetrable mystery. A family named King had slowly and painfully accumulated a small fortune of $30,000, and being more than suspicious of Savings Banks, real estate, stocks and all other investments, thought to get the "best wool" on financial casualties by putting the amount into gold and government bonds and hiding it in an old valise in the attic. This plan worked to a charm for some months, the little dark closet that held all this treasure kept its own counsel and the family chuckled over wisdom and prudence every time they read of a bathless cashier or a broken trust institution. But about a week ago all this happiness was turned to gall by the untoward discovery one fine evening that the staple and padlock guarding the secret fortune hung broken and useless from the closet door, and that the fortune aforesaid had taken wings and flown away. Talk has been plenty on Vesey street since that night, and the detectives are worrying their lives out trying to find the bold and knowing thief who showed such a nose for secret coin, but nothing has been accomplished and the King family are turning wearily back to the pickle factory to earn once more the accumulation of a competency which, if obtained, will probably be deposited elsewhere than in the domestic attic.

The Fifth Avenue Hotel, par excellence the representative hotel of the metropolis, commenced on August 1st the twentieth year of its business career more prosperous and with greater prestige than ever before. It remains as ever a thoroughly cosmopolitan house, being quite as well known among the traveling aristocracy of Europe as among the highest class of American society. It was there that the Prince of Wales resided when in the city on his memorable trip of twenty years ago, and since that time hundreds of less distinguished visitors from abroad have proved its hospitality.

For many a year the Fifth Avenue has been one of the institutions of New York. For banquets, for political and financial conferences, as well as for social assemblages of the highest order, it has become the most famous resort of the metropolis. Following the general tendencies of times the management celebrated the anniversary already hailed by reducing the rates from $5 to $4 per day. RADIX.

THE LABOR INVESTIGATION.

The Committee of the National House of Representatives to examine the Executive and labor depression question met in New York City, on the 1st. There were present Messrs. A. S. Hewitt N. Y., J. M. Thomason (Ind.), W. W. Hav Mass.) and Thomas A. Boyd Ill.). Wood was reported that H. L. Bridges (Ohio) would not be able to serve until after the October elections.

After an exhaustive session, the Committee decided to sit daily, an hour each person as might appear, taking the task of their engineers being timed.

Thomas Beck who represented the stone masons, assured the Committee by resolution that all Government work should be done by people of the place in which the Government buildings are being erected. He spoke against the system of giving out contracts for Government work, as the contractor made the profit which the Government might save by employing the workmen direct. He did not intend to apply the rule to private individuals, and would not advise the Government to regulate wages. Much of the want of employment he had arisen from the use of machinery. The sawing of stone being now done by machinery. If there was no machinery, the society might compel men to work only for wages fixed by the society.

Hugh McGregor, one of the well-established contractors connected with the Custom House, Treasury and Sub-Treasury buildings, addressed the Committee on the subject of the Government collecting statistics of the building trades, and suggested that they could be readily referred to. He said it was the duty of the United States to examine into every manufactory, take cognizance only of such as he thought fit, and question operatives into their sanitary conditions and everything necessary for the welfare of the laboring classes. He also said that the use of machinery was the result of necessity, and must be met by men, and said the misfortune of families was the result of drunkenness, and not of machinery. Mr. McGregor also said that he was employed by the Government to erect buildings at a cost of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, and he was willing to work for $3 per day, but he could not get it, and had to pay more.

Stephen Edwards, a member of the Knights of Labor, also addressed the Committee. He said that he was employed by the Government on the Sub-Treasury building, and he could get it to work for $3 per day, but he could not get it done for less than $4. He did not think that the Government should interfere in any way between employer and employed. He was not in favor of the reduction of a day's labor. If more wages would not help the workingman.

Adolph Danz, of the Scientific Labor party, also appeared, and submitted that the Government ought to purchase land for every man and woman in the United States. He claimed that the Government should erect a law to prevent men from being forced to labor more than eight hours a day, and forbidding their engagement in any occupation that would be injurious to their health or constitution.

James Connelly, representing the National Greenback party, ascribed the depression in labor to the bond issue, saying that the people had their money out of mendicants and usurers that bonds, on which they obtain interest. He denounced the railroad land grants, and thought the Government should have sold their own railroads. The great means, he declared, to relieve the distress among the laboring classes was for the Government to refund them to settle on the public lands, and ensure them support until they reaped their first crop. He advised that all the laws of Congress now in favor of large manufacturers and shippers be repealed, and that the middle and laboring classes.

After hearing a few other witnesses whose views were similar to those given, the Committee invited the manufacturers, business men, etc., to give their views.

THE workingmen's representatives were on the same season, on the 5th, and they laid the blame of the depression in business to National and State legislation, the granting of lands to railroad and other corporations and the granting of large subsidies to banks. They advocated the idea that the Government should assist men to settle on the public lands.

W. A. A. Carey who said he was a bricklayer and not a politician, in favor of a free school system was last. He favored the Government should establish schools where men learn trades and are would be taught. He favored the greenback system, and a National, State and City Government and said that under the present system the wealth was centralized by capitalists, and if ever an opportunity to end the ghastly deeds of the taking cash and cruder Chinese and others, against whom American laborers could not compete, because the latter cannot live as the former do. He thought it the duty for any Government to encourage strains of foreigners to come over the only to create cheap labor, knowing the want and needs of the working people, he felt certain that, if Congress did not do it as early day with one law for legislation the coming winter could not pass national measures and obtain a report from of the labor time of last summer. A great movement would be the institution of a reciprocity between capital of internal improvements, and the cultivation of the country by means of the unemployed.

George W. Mathias, of the "Congress of Humanity," wanted the Government to issue $1,000,000,000 of money to be laid down and set forth, and comparatively similar sums in other cities to employ the people. He said that when those works would have made self-sustaining, they could be sold to the highest bidder, and the notes destroyed, as counted bonds are.

Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines, a female lawyer and member of the "Congress of Humanity of the World," said that the idea of employing people to labor was cowardly to the country was to grant aid. Wage to women in the shape of pensions to all and children, rather than the men. She therefore asked Mr. McGregor if he was willing to take an oath as to the truth of what he states, and he answered he did not take an oath, and did not believe in what was called the Everlasting God. Mrs. Gaines then asked him if he would expect the Government to endow upon him a hundred times as much as the poorest laborer. He wanted neither gentlemen nor communism, for an equitable law would give to each some satisfactory manner of admission between master and servant. She said that the rights of laborers, and the right to work when and where they could get it, and for as many hours as he chose.

SEVERAL other reformers were before the Committee on the 6th. Among them was one named Boldt, who read a lengthy statement and said he had a right to live, and a right for land, for that sake. "He shall not sell the land forever." He also claimed the power of land to feed and support all the people.

Hannah Cohen, formerly a manufacturer of clothing, and a large employer of labor, spoke of the depression, and after counting out of the small profits, and he regretted the Committee to be limited in time examination.

Mr. Graham, Secretary of the Workingmen's Union, held that we do not desire the evils and of the Old World to come here and shut out development. He did not intend to demand capital when honestly accumulated, but he demanded reduced monopolies and the taxing of gains of privileges, etc., by stock jobbing and speculation. Reduce the land monopoly, enforce eight-hour labor, stop railroad jobs and give the money the banks. The saving has begun down all the same to forego strangers. He one of the elements in favor of forbids. He favored the large unemployed population as cities ought to be sold to the tracts of lands and settled thereon by private enterprise.

Mr. Hewitt asked Mr. Marshall, a large shipowner, to give his views. Mr. Marshall said it did not seem any industrial remedy. He thought the removal of taxes as much as possible, especially such taxes as operate against private and the abolition of the protective law preventing Americans from buying any cheaper abroad would restore the ship-building trade.

Hermann B. Shepherd, of the National Reform Association, attributed the present depression to mistakes in the currency question—the much inflation and too much deflation.

The President of the Cigar-Makers' Union spoke of the recent strike of cigar-makers in the cigar trade only. He said while the number of cigars manufactured steadily increased the number of cigar-makers employed was worse. The trouble had been caused by the General Government by a system of taxation which throws tobacco into the hands of large manufacturers. The first cause is the introduction of Chinese into the trade in San Francisco, and in New York the tenement-house system caused ruin. The system is a shame and disgrace. For a whole family, man, woman and children, work day and night, from fourteen to eighteen hours, and still only make enough to live, or rather starve, on, and when the cigar-makers struck for wages, the landlords, who were the manufacturers, turned 700 wretched families into the streets. He asked that the tenement-house system be abolished, and that cigars be allowed to be made only in the factories. He was not opposed to Chinamen as a rule, but he was opposed to the importation of Chinese or any other labor under such a system. He was opposed to the importation of all labor by contract.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Union College has given Edison the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

—Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines is a little more than seventy-three years old.

—Senator Gordon, of Georgia, has bought a tract of several thousand acres in Worth County, Ga., for a sheep farm.

—It is reported that the King of the Belgians has offered to detran the expenses of another expedition across Africa by Stanley, and that the latter has accepted the offer.

—"The poems of Homer were chiefly traditional and oral, till Pisistratus collected them in writing four or five hundred years after the age of the poet. Iliff to Ossian was collected by Macpherson

—Jesse Pomeroy, the Boston boy murderer, was recently put to work in Concord (Mass.) Prison, but his still-fully spilled $75 worth of stock, and now none of the officers are allowed to speak to him, and he has to endure solitary confinement with nothing to do —The term Blue Stocking, applied to literary ladies, was conferred on a society which was started the Blue Stocking Club, in which females were admitted; and so called owing to a Mr. Benjamin Stillingfleet, one of its acting members, always wearing blue stockings.

—Of the report that a nephew of Senator Sumner married a wandering actress old enough to be his mother, who, after a short honeymoon, left him for pretty unknown, and that he had tried in vain to have the wife punished, is alleged and executed by his relatives in Boston, the Boston Journal says: "Senator Sumner left no nephew for the simple reason that he never had one. The twin sister of the Senator, Matilda, died unmarried, and George, Jane, Mary and Horatio have never had any children. His brother Albert and sister Julia were married and had daughters only."

—A New York letter says the following: "A gentleman was in Orange, N. J., the other day. He wanted to go to the mountain. There was no coach at hand. A gentleman in a carriage offered the stranger a seat, which was accepted. The gentleman was civil and pointed out the beauties of the region. He seemed to have the faculty of drawing men out upon their own conversation. 'Gov. McClellan lives in this neighborhood, I believe,' said the visitor. 'He does. He has a small house on the mountain.' His acquaintance was extended. The courteous gentleman seemed to have many acquaintances. Nearly every passer-on from or carriage lifted his hat. Public men were talked of. The stranger was about to ask about the 'General,' and he now wonders that he did not. The coach pulled up at an elegant mansion, and the gentleman said: 'This is Gen. McClellan's house; won't you walk in?' 'And this is Gov. McClellan, I presume,' said the stranger. 'At your service,' was the response."

Lost Immortality.

LAST Sunday a number of parades and purgatives in Battle Mountain convened the idea of acquiring fame and astonishing his friends and relatives in the East by representing himself as a noted scalp-lifter, and furnishing camphor proof of his prowess on the warpath. He engaged two decrepit Shoshone bucks, whose faces glistened with vermilion, to decorate their scalp-locks with feathers and go with him to Lake's photograph tent and have their pictures taken, while he stood in the foreground with a double-barreled shot-gun, shouting, "Surrender, savages!" To make the scene as tragic as possible he gathered a lot of buff hides from the rear of a hotel and scattered them around the Indians. The preliminaries having been arranged to his satisfaction, the photograph man fixed his machine and was in the act of getting it located on the group when the Indians, saying, "Heap no goodmays-ka shoot," skedaddled from the tent as fast as their legs could carry them, and have not been seen since. The white brave wanted a photograph of himself grown with slaughter-yard surroundings to send back to his friends in New York to show them how he captured two Bannock warriors at the muzzle of a shot-gun. The unexpected departure of the Indians deprived him of the opportunity to immortalize himself, and he is now the most disconsolate warrior in the State of Nevada.—Winnemucca (Nev.) Silver State.

HARD times are plainly visible at fashionable watering places. The ladies do not appear in such elaborate toilets, and retrenchment is in order among gentlemen.

Women Traveling Alone.

The story which was published in a morning newspaper a few days ago of the abduction of a lady from a railroad car in the central part of this State was on its face too improbable to be believed without a better authentication of names and dates than was given. According to the report, the lady was traveling in Albany to meet her husband. Two men, strangers to her, were in the car. When the conductor approached to receive the lady's ticket they told him that she was insane, that they were friends or relatives of hers, that she was under their charge, and that they were taking her to the asylum at Utica. The indignant denials and passionate remonstrances of the lady were represented by the men to be the signs and the results of her malady. As she knew no person on the train who could confirm her statement in regard to herself, the conductor was induced to believe the account of the two men, and to permit them to remove the lady at Utica, notwithstanding her piteous appeals and her coherent and probable narrative. When the train reached Albany the waiting husband was found, and a special engine carried him and the conductor to Utica, where the lady was discovered, not in the asylum but in a private house, and not in time to prevent great suffering on her part.

This story has been contradicted by some of the newspapers of Boston, where the lady was reported to dwell, and, strange to say, has been confirmed by others of the same city. We do not refer to it to discuss the case or to express an opinion on the truth of the story, further than to say that either the story is false or the unnamed conductor acted with criminal stupidity or indifference. We mention the matter because, with some changes of circumstance, what is described might have happened; and because the report brings up the whole question of the unattended traveling of women and the many annoyances and dangers which are incidental to it.

We say that this thing might have happened because women have been stolen, not from a railroad car and from among strangers, but from their homes and from among friends, and have disappeared in a manner so unusual, without any just cause for their deprivation of liberty. If their relatives have been able to deceive persons supposed to be familiar with the facts and to hold their victims helpless in the very presence of sympathizing acquaintances, is it hard to believe that persons who knew nothing of the facts, who had not even the right to ask questions, could give to interfere or to make inquiries, could be deceived by men who had shrewdly contrived to represent themselves as relatives of a woman in distress? Such a case similar to the one which has been reported in the Times? With proper arrangements for a private apartment for insanity, however, such a thing never could happen. Under statutory provisions requiring an order from a court, upon sufficient proof, as a warrant for such a proceeding, the person who pretended to be the custodians of the Boston lady—if any men did so pretend—could have been required to show their authority at every step of the journey. The keenness on the subject which has prevailed seeking in the legislation of Christian countries to protect unprotected in the carelessness of the conductor of the Albany train—if there was such a train or such a conductor. It is supposed, or the event which might happen, is an illustration of the immense timeliness of the new and earnest attention which has been given everywhere to this subject of the treatment of the insane.

The case, real or imaginary, suggests the question: Should women travel alone? It would involve much special hardship and a general reproach to our civilization to be obliged to answer the question in the negative. Women do travel alone and in safety; and nowhere have they a larger liberty in this respect than in this country. So far as mailed knights and tournaments and crusades and wagers of battles and like things are concerned the days of chivalry has passed, but there is almost a chivalrous spirit which secures to every woman who wants protection and deserves it a protection as complete and efficient as the stoutest cavalier ever gave to maidens in distress. Partly owing to this spirit, and partly owing to the carefulness and intelligence of the agents of our carrying companies, it is a rule substantially without exception that a woman may travel unattended, in perfect safety, and comfort, from one end of the land to the other. From minor perils and annoyances women are safe. The circumstances of the case, actual or invented, which we have mentioned, are so peculiar that they scarcely come within the rule, and it must be admitted that they are so likely to occur that ladies who from duty or inclination make unattended journeys need not stay at home from fear of them. At the same time women traveling alone should be prepared to act with intelligence and energy in an emergency; and especially should furnish themselves with evidences for their easy and certain identification.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Mr. Quiggles Clears Up the Gloom.

"I'll tell you how it is," said Quiggles, to a friend, who was complaining of being crowded into a corner, "you can make a fortune by going into bankruptcy, if your debts are only big enough to make it an object. The more you owe, the more you make, don't you see?"

"No, I'll be smothered if I do," said the unfortunate friend. "I owe enough, mercy knows, if that's all you want, but how I'm to pay even fifty cents on the dollar, and have anything left to commence over again, is one of the things I can't see into."

"But you don't want to pay your debts, man. Well, but you are a green one—that is too good. Ha! ha-ha! What are you going to fail for?"

"Coz I can't help it. Bung it all, what are you laughing about?"

"But you can't afford to fail in these hard times, unless you can make a snug thing out of it. You mustn't plunge headlong into ruin with your eyes shut," said Quiggles, adjusting his diamond pin.

"Mustn't I?"

"No! never do in the world. Have your wits about you and keep your head clear. Don't let the trouble worry you into fogging your brain with too much drink. Wouldn't do at all. Keep your eye peeled and watch for the main chance."

"Yes—yes, I see. But how?"

"You must appoint your own receiver, and be sure to select the worst numbskull you can find. Get a man that don't know enough to drive a cow, and too lazy to add up a column of figures, even if he knows how. If you can find a person that can't read, so much the better. Make him believe there ain't hardly anything to divide, and you may be fine off cheap."

"So, ho, that's the way, is it? Go on, I'm learning fast."

"If the man can get is green enough and not too blamed awkward to stumble on the true state of things accidentally, you won't have a bit of trouble. Wheels up with him right at the start, chuck his eyes close full of dust, keep your own counsel and rake in the pile."

"But the creditors—what are they to do?"

"Them? Oh, they can hold the bag and take what drops, but you take mighty good care to hold the screws steady and use them double quick enough. Play it low, and you're heeled, old boy, mark me, I'm talking by the book, for I've been there myself, and know."

And Quiggles consulted his magnificent stem-winder and said it was about his time of day to refresh.—Chambers's Breakfast-Table.

Insects in South America.

In reviewing "Fifteen Thousand Miles on the Amazon and its Tributaries," the Spectator refers to the insect life of which Mr. Bates writes, and had occasion frequently to speak of "The marvelous." It says, "impresses us forcibly with a perfect confidence, and certainly does not stimulate one's desire to visit the localities spoken of. In the first place, the journey was nothing like so easy as we are led to believe in Mr. Bates's pages. Imagination fails to conceive their numbers and variety; the mosquitoes alone, in the evenings, build hills of immense length, and inflict a sting as sharp as if they had been coined for the purpose. Then there are the ants, which are always ready for the use of the family, and if he wishes to be a man of leisure he can readily find good tenants who are glad to cultivate his land for half the crops, finding their own seed, tools, and implements. Any one having the use of a farm in grass he can sell some stock each year, and have what land is cultivated in a second year. Then, if the owner may also already had from his farm what would cost him in town five or six hundred dollars, and certainly it will be worth double the money at country prices, to sell enough produce from the farm to make his income better for the support of his family than 8 per cent on $10,000 would be, and he need not commit the stock quotations and to know anything in the world, anything or not.—Practical Farmer.

How to Increase Property.

It is seldom advisable for women who have a sufficient income to attempt to increase by exchanges or by dealing in business ventures. But there are many whose income is inadequate, and who are under the necessity of increasing their income or losing their family friends. Supposing a woman in these circumstances is of an indolent, quiet turn, and would prefer to depend on the assistance of friends, my first suggestion to her would be to remove that, come what may, her present property shall not be diminished. And if to what she has she can, by self-denial, and earnest effort, add something from time to time, the tide will at length turn to her favor. She may hear it whispered, "Molly Stark has taken up dressing, has become a governess, is saving hay bales,—she's a ninnie. Well, Molly Stark is not beholden to such, nor ever will be.

Saving and laying up is the habit that succeeds. It seems to be in the blood of some families of both sexes alike to be independent. Cost what it may of personal self-denial, they will set the ball rolling that will grow into a round competence. How much better and happier such a life in the long-run than a life of supineness and semi-dependence.

A resolute woman is pretty sure to find one or another to do that which will be remunerative, and her prospect's of working out her pecuniary salvation, I think, are better than those of the average man in the same circumstances. Of course, her success all depends on losing no time and saving and laying up her earnings.—"Hints to Woman on the Care of Property."

Origin of Heat-Waves.

Now that the torrid season is practically over, one of the questions naturally suggested by the terrific heat-waves which spasmodically fall upon us is: What is their origin? Are they due to local influences, or directly caused by fluctuations in the sun itself? Does the great source of light and heat remain uniform in its supplies, or are its forces subject to periodic ebb and flow? In short, is the sun a variable star? Startling as an affirmative answer to this last question might appear, there would really be nothing strange in such a fact. The fixed stars are known to be gigantic suns, shining by their own light, and giving out, undoubtedly, enormous quantities of heat, although we are too distant to perceive it, and each is probably the center of an attendant system of planets, just as our sun is. Yet among these far-off worlds we find many subject to periodic variations of brilliancy, appearing and disappearing with almost clockwork regularity, or suddenly flashing up as new stars and as quickly fading away forever.

One of the most striking examples of this variability is the star Mira, or "The Wonderful," in the constellation of The Whale. This singularly beautiful star has a period of thirty-three months in which it passes from the second magnitude, but in less than four hours it falls to one of the fourth magnitude, and remains in that condition for twenty minutes. Then it begins to increase in brightness, and in three days and a half more has regained its rank as a second-magnitude star, and continues to hold it for two days and a half, when it again passes through its periodic changes. These are by no means isolated cases. The number of stars known to be variable is large, some of them pass through their round of variations in long and others in short periods, and all are probably due to fluctuations which conform to no fixed rules.

Several facts seem to indicate that our sun is a variable star of the same kind, though not subject to such extreme changes as Mira and Algol. In the first place, the perfect uniformity which has existed for ages, although when the forests are somewhat cleared, it may be hoped that these plagues will also take their departure."—Chicago Tribune.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Death to weeds is the motto of every good farmer.

—Quick Pudding.—One pint milk, one pint flour, three eggs and a little salt.

—The economy of waste matter is what tells in all things. Bottle on the farm particularly.

—The Rhode Journal recommends fresh buttermilk as an excellent substitute for isinglass.

—Kerosene applied with a rag, to stoves, will keep them from rusting during the summer; also good for iron utensils on the farm.

—Mutton and lamb are peppers, for a few pieces of charcoal, into a pot where lean, cabbage, etc., is boiling, and the house will not be filled with the offense I've odor.

—Your farm is your fixed capital; improvements are your investments; and your crops, every thousand of your production, are your dividends.—Prairie Farmer.

—Three crops of weeds plowed under in succession, when about six inches high, will, it is said, make a fine clean crop of almost anything that is desirable to plant afterward.

—To Whiten Porcelain Saucepans.—Rinse the pans and filled with hot water, throwin a tablespoonful of powdered borax and let it boil. If this does not remove all of the stains, soap a cloth, sprinkle on plenty of powdered borax. Scour it well.

—Lemon Jelly.—Grate the rind and take the juice of one lemon, pare and grate six raw apples, one cup of sugar, one cup of water, juice of one orange, all together and let it come to a boil. This is very nice to use between cakes in place of other jelly.

—Orange Custards.—The juice of six oranges strained and sweetened with white sugar. Stir over a slow fire till the sugar is dissolved, taking off the scum, when nearly cold add the yolks of six eggs well beaten and a pint of cream or milk. Stir over the fire till it thickens, and serve in glasses. It should not come to a boil.

—Baked Apple-Dumplings.—These we think are very much superior to those boiled or steamed. Roll thin any nice puff paste and cut it into square pieces. Pare and remove the cores from nice stewing apples and roll an apple in each piece of paste; put them into a baking-dish, brush them with the white of an egg, sprinkle with and sift sugar over them. Bake about three-quarter of an hour and serve with sauce or anything you like.—Germantown Telegraph.

Blemishes not more on earth are those whose tastes are not in accord with ours.

A pasture largely producing weeds or inferior grasses is not profitable, and yet there are many such pastures.

Cows trained by a dog, or coaxed with a milk-stool, don't often yield the most milk or produce the best butter.

Young men, if you are going to be a farmer, determine in be a good one. Don't be ashamed to work.

There are some happy farmers. They have no debts to pay. Have good farms, good crops, good wives and good children.

Thousands of bushels of grain are ruined every year by bad sweating. Only one remedy—keep the middle of the stack full enough.

Potato bugs sometimes annoy tomato plants. But the great golden caterpillar worm is very destructive, eating in a day as much as a pig. They must be removed.

No animals, unless well fed at all times, can give a constant return for the feed consumed, and no pasture is safe from going to ruin unless constant use in dry weather by a herd of poor, hungry animals.

One Thing at a Time in Housework.

In doing housework, system is absolutely necessary. Perhaps a nurse can be spared from the children's bedroom in order. At first sight it seems a hopeless task; but let us take one thing at a time. First we will plan all of Harry's blocks and pieces of wood into his wheelbarrow. This is one thing done. It makes a difference to the aspect of the room already. Now gather up May's toys into her basket, and that will add considerably to the stock of good order. Now make the bed. Already order rises from chaos. After the washstand is arranged, the room must be swept. Happily, however, we sprinkle tea-leaves over the carpet. That will keep the dust from rising, and will freshen the colors bright and fresh. Let us pick up all the threads, strings and bits of cloth first, as it is hard to sweep them up and secure the carpet badly. Do not make too long a sweep with your broom, and, above all things, avoid flourishes—that is the girl's style of sweeping. Let us throw up the window and allow as much dust as possible to go out that way. Do not brush too hard, or you will roll up a ball of wool from the carpet by the time you are done, which is just so much taken out of the sweep and wear of it. When the dusting is done we shall have a fresh, tidy room. You see that all work is easy if systematically done. Now a word or two on another disagreeable duty—dish-washing. Keep the outside of the dishes clean by removing all the crumbs and scraps before washing them. The dish-washing of some housekeepers must be very disagreeable and tedious, owing to their non-observance of this precaution. Stack the table dishes, like to like, in the order of their size, in the dish-pan, and the cooking dishes in another, immediately pouring hot suds through them all. Puncture one corner of the dish cloth with a fork, and, winding the tines up in it like a cocoon, wash the dishes with it, wetting the hand but immersing, during the whole operation. After pouring out the rinsing-water which have very hot—remove them in stacks to another pan, and place them on their edges about some tall dish to dry and drain. Rinse and drain forks and spoons by dipping in a pitcher.—By following these directions the process of dish-washing can be made less irksome than it usually is.—Washington Star.

The Farm as an Investment.

The man who by inheritance or some lucky turn of the wheel of fortune finds himself in the possession of a moderate fortune, is often sadly perplexed in looking for a safe investment. Shall he invest in railroad stocks? He fairs to the ground as a fine of papers and the fluctuations frighten him. He realizes that an Ashburnin disaster or a "Corner" has taken a million from both Jay Gould and Russell Sage, and yet he sees many others making fortunes in stocks. Then there is the real estate investment. If he would expect to make a safe investment, it can be shown that money put in a farm will be found actually to yield a better income than in many of those lucrative investments. Let us suppose that a man with a wife and four children (to support a widowess) has $10,000 ready cash. He invests it on first mortgage security, at 8 per cent. Aside from what he may earn by his personal efforts, his income is $800. Out of this he must pay house-rent, buy his fuel, and all his provisions, groceries and dry-goods, school-bills and books, and if the family indulge in travel, livery-stable bills and car-fare, and before the year is out he will find the closest economy necessary to avoid debt.

On the other hand, let him invest his ten thousand in a good farm—eight thousand in the farm itself and two thousand in some choice stock and a good team and family carriage. With $2,000 it will be easy to stock the farm with 100 acres of good land all under fence and with good buildings. His farm will furnish him beef, mutton, pork, eggs and poultry, bread-stuff, fruit and vegetables, milk and butter and all of the best quality. The family carriage are always ready for the use of the family, and if he wishes to be a man of leisure he can readily find good tenants who are glad to cultivate his land for half the crops, finding their own team and tools. By keeping the improved breed of farm in grass he can sell some stock each year, and have what land is cultivated in a second year. Then, if the owner may also already had from his farm what would cost him in town five or six hundred dollars, and certainly it will be worth double the money at country prices, to sell enough produce from the farm to make his income better for the support of his family than 8 per cent on $10,000 would be, and he need not commit the stock quotations and to know anything in the world, anything or not.—Practical Farmer.

A Hotel Swindle.

Scene, a hotel in a small town—but a flourishing town—in Illinois. A young man arrives, calls for the best room in the house. He enters his name in a bold hand on the register as Turner, of the jewelry house of "Smith & Co., New York. Manufactory at Providence, R. I." The first thing he asks for is letters; finding that there are none, he particularly inquires of the times for the arrival of the mail, as letters of great importance were to meet him there. Has had a dusty ride, it is some time before the dinner hour, and he orders a bottle of the best wine in the house; he does not like to drink alone, and the landlord must help him dispose of the bottle. The young man's chief want seems to be letters, and all the next day he asks at every mail's arrival for letters. At last the lookers-for letter comes, he hastily opens it in presence of the landlord and takes out a check. He erases the antiquity of the maker of the house in New York. "He might have known that there was no bank at this place. I charge him in always send money in a registered letter, and here is a confounded useless check (for $100 or $200, as may be). I am notified that a case of samples are stored in the express office. Where they must go at once, and here I am with nothing but this check." And more of the same kind. The landlord, good-natured, the young man is good looking, and free with his wine, and the chances are that the landlord ends the young man's trouble, and offers to cash the check—minus the young man's wine and board bill. Young man is very grateful, gets his check endorsed, and starts to the next town for his samples. But he does not stop there, he goes on to some other place, as may have been agreed upon, where the same game is played over again; the same anxiety about letters; the same disappointment on finding a check for a round sum of money, in a town where there was no bank, etc., etc. As the shocks are drawn in the same New York bank, a number of days before the landlords discover that they are mere worthless paper, and the young man, who, of course, never goes where he says he is going, is far out of reach.

A large number of landords in the Western States hold the worthless checks of "Smith, Melville & Co., Manufacturing Jewelers in New York factory at Providence, R. I." But of course the name is changed from time to time. We have some of the checks, and can say that, taken as checks, they are very pretty.—American Agriculturist.

Each Township will be entitled to one delegate for every twenty registered voters, and every fraction of twenty over ten. Each delegation will bring, in addition to their credentials a certified copy of the number of voters in their respective Townships. The County Committee, at their last meeting, passed the following resolution:

Resolved: That we recommend to the several Township Committees that that they give at least six days notice of their caucuses by posting written notices in at least three of the most conspicuous places in the Township.

That there may be a full and fair representation of the Republican voters, it is hoped that the recommendation will be strictly observed.

GRAIN IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.—The Secretary of State has published a tabular statement of grain raised in the several counties of Michigan in the year 1877; the number of acres sown in 1878 and the probable yield, etc. Charlevoix County has one Township not reported. In 1877 we had 671 acres of wheat yield, ing 13,185 bushels. Let it be borne in mind this is wheat alone. In 1878 there were on the ground 1,366 acres of wheat, which, at the same average yield per acre (about 15 bushels) will furnish 20,449 bushels of wheat. It is the universal opinion, however, that the yield will greatly exceed that of last year. This shows the increase of yield in 1878 to be nearly fifty per. cent. over that of 1877. The number of acres of other grains raised in the county in 1877, was, oats, 640 acres, 467; barley 21. The yield is not given.

Tent Life at Charlevoix.

Rev. L. F. Compton, pastor of the Baptist church, Burgis, after an enjoyable experience of a few weeks at the Baptist Summer Resort, writes to the Journal as follows:

Perchance you and your readers will enjoy reading something of the place in the north woods. The tide here is not the most exhausting, though there is an abundance of sand and pines, if it is the tide one is looking for, I would suggest some other route. (A ride from 9 o'clock A. M. to 12 o'clock midnight with the thermometer crowding close on 100 degrees in the shade is not calculated to be the most inspiring anywhere.) But the end of the journey was what we were after. Suffice it to say that when we found the cool we also found occasion to put on a thick coat, and had the sublime privilege of going to bed, putting a blanket over us and sleeping the remainder of the night without any intimation whatever of mosquys. Oh, what a privilege, what a joy to get away from the heat, away from the hills and rivulets of perspiration, away from where one needs to stand in a tub or pail for fear he will dissolve entirely and not leave a drop of consolation to his friends, away where it is cool, where sleep is a pleasure and delight, and food a luxury and life an inspiration. Well, here we have found them all. One wonders what has become of the heat, the perspiration and all the misery of the heated town. With the thermometer among the eighties there is no sweating and pulling and seeking of fans and the ever luxurient shade. Men work right on and scarcely realize that it is warm, flannel underclothing is not a burden. What a change! I can scarcely realize it. It may be accounted for in part from the fact that we are so far north, in part from the fact that we at Charlevoix are located on an elevated point that just cut between Lake Michigan and Pine Lake, (the latter is about 15 miles long by about one mile wide,) and hence have an almost constant breeze, the most refreshing exhilarating imaginable. The Charlevoix Baptist Summer Resort is one of the most delightful spots on earth, during July and August. My wife, boy and myself are living here in a tent 10 feet by 14 feet. When we go to bed we say, "what a grand night for sleeping," when we awake we exclaim, "what a beautiful morning," and when we eat we cannot help but remark, "what grand fish, potatoes, peas, beans, fruit, everything." It all seems so much better than at home. It seems better, and much of it is better. The fish and vegetables are as much better as the best beef steak is better than the poorest. They are firmer, richer and fresher. And what shall I say more? Come and see for yourself and then call me an enthusiast if you want to.

ELSEWHERE we give a statement of grain raised in Charlevoix County in 1877, and the acreage of this year. Considering that Charlevoix is the smallest county in the State, the showing is very satisfactory, as is also the increase shown of the acreage of this year over that of last. With such strides as this in grain raising, Charlevoix County cannot but be on the threshold of an importance which shall be recognized These facts must show conclusively that a flouring mill at this the central marketing point, would even now prove a profitable investment, and in the future a means of securing a fortune. Let it be borne in mind that in addition to the figures given, Charlevoix is the natural grain market, for an old and extensive farming comotry in the Northern part of Antrim County, and which yields many thousand bushels of grain annually. It is believed by experienced men that within three years a mill with four runs of stones would find steady grinding from the grain which will be naturally tributary to this point. Let some one take hold of the matter.

UNKNOWN THING.—One day last week Levi Hammond, wife, of Boyne, came to town leaving their children at home, during the absence of the parents an unknown drunken Indian drove the children from the house, defaced a quantity of supplies and left. On reaching the State road the Indian heard footsteps, and dropping his plunder, fled. The children proceed on to those of Mr. and Mrs. House, who have recovered their property.

MAINE.—The propeller JAYE, from Buffalo to Chicago, sank in 200 feet of water, on the 18th, off Point Au Sable on the Michigan side, with a valuable cargo of mixed merchandise, most of which will be an entire loss. She was an iron vessel of 1,700 tons burthen, and cost $170,000. She was valued this year at $100,000. The cargo was fully insured, and the vessel was insured for $36,000. The breaking of the starboard coupling, and knocking out the side of the vessel was the cause of the accident. No lives were lost. The JAYE was the steamer commanded by Capt. Dodge, just before he took command of the Van Raalte.

—The tug T. W. Ferry, from Grand Haven, was here Tuesday with a party of fishermen.

—L. D. Bartholomew, of this place, has purchased the steam yacht Nellie Beach, and put her on Pine Lake to run alternate days with the Gazelle.

An important basis of the prosperity of Petoskey, or of any town, is the development of the surrounding country. Some indications of this latter was seen by your correspondent, on a recent trip to Advance, a little village about 18 miles southwest of Petoskey, on Pine Lake.—Petoskey Record.

Petoskey, you know, is the hub, around which revolves all creation and part of Canada. We once heard of a lunatic who imagined himself God. If there Petoskey people keep on inflating their imagination they will have Chicago and Charlevoix of secondary importance to Petoskey, and a part of the "surrounding country." Humph!

"LITTLE NELLIE."—A seven-year old child, Nellie Carr, arrived in Detroit a few days ago from St. John, N. B. She traveled the entire distance on the rail (1,700 miles), without any other companion save her "little dolly," and throughout the trip was the pet of all the passengers, through whose watchful care and tender regard the unprotected little waif arrived in safety.—Ex.

Our readers will at once recognize "Little Nellie" as the daughter of Joseph Hotchkiss, and the sister child of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Carr, formerly of this place. Mr. Carr died some time ago in New Brunswick, and the child was undoubtedly being returned to the care of her natural father, who resides near Kalamazoo.

Carpenter & Bartholomew's rapidly increasing trade has obliged them to procure more room. They have leased the Morgan property, adjoining their place of business which they will use for furniture, doors, windows, agricultural implements, etc

Republican County Convention

A Republican County Convention to nominate candidates for County officers, will be held at the Town Hall in the village of Charlevoix, on Thursday the 5th day of September, 1878, at one o'clock in the afternoon. Each Township will be entitled to one delegate for every twenty registered voters, and every fraction of twenty over ten. Each delegation will bring, in addition to their credentials a certified copy of the number of voters in their respective Townships. The County Committee, at their last meeting, passed the following resolution:

Resolved: That we recommend to the several Township Committees that that they give at least six days notice of their caucuses by posting written notices in at least three of the most conspicuous places in the Township.

That there may be a full and fair representation of the Republican voters, it is hoped that the recommendation will be strictly observed.

GRAIN IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.—The Secretary of State has published a tabular statement of grain raised in the several counties of Michigan in the year 1877; the number of acres sown in 1878 and the probable yield, etc. Charlevoix County has one Township not reported in 1877 we had 871 acres of wheat yielding 18,185 bushels. Let it be borne in mind this is wheat alone. In 1878 there were on the ground 1,866 acres of wheat, which, at the same average yield per acre (about 15 bushels) will furnish 30,449 bushels of wheat. It is the universal opinion, however, that the yield will greatly exceed that of last year. This shows the increase of yield in 1878 to be nearly fifty per cent. over that of 1877. The number of acres of other grains raised in the county in 1877, was, oats, 940 acres, 467; barley 21. The yield is not given.

Tent Life at Charlevoix.

Rev. L. F. Compton, pastor of the Baptist church, Sturgis, after an enjoyable experience of a few weeks at the Baptist Summer Resort, writes to the Journal as follows:

Perchance you and your readers will enjoy reading something of the place in the north woods. The ride here is not the most exhilarating, though there is an abundance of sand and pines; it it is the tide one is looking for, I would suggest some other route. (A ride from 6 o'clock A. M. to 12 o'clock midnight with the thermometer crowding close on 100 degrees in the shade is not calculated to be the most inspiring anywhere.) But the end of the journey was what we were after. Suffice it to say that when we found the end we also found ocean to float on a thick coat, and had the sublime privilege of going to bed, putting a blanket over us and sleeping the remainder of the night without any intention whatever of inquiring. Oh, what a privilege, what a joy to get away from the heat, away from the rills and rivulets of perspiration, away from where one needs to stand in a tub or pail for fear he will dissolve entirely and not leave a drop of consolation to his friends, away where it is cool, where sleep is a pleasure and delight, and loaf a luxury and life an inspiration. Well, here we have found them all. One wonders what last season, of the heat, the perspiration and all the misery of the locality was. With the thermometer among the eighties there is no sweating and puffing and seeking of fans and the ever luxurient shade. Men work right on and scarcely realize that it is warm, flannel underclothing is not a burden. What a change! I can scarcely realize it. It may be accounted for in part from the fact that we are so far north, in part from the fact that we at Charlevoix are located on an elevated point that juts out between Lake Michigan and Pine Lake, (the latter is about 15 miles long by about one mile wide,) and hence have an almost constant breeze, the most refreshing exhilarating imaginable. The Charlevoix Baptist Summer Resort is one of the most delightful spots on earth, during July and August. My wife, boy and myself are living here in a tent 10 feet by 14 feet. When we go to bed we say, "what a grand night for sleeping," when we awake we exclaim, "what a beautiful morning," and when we eat we cannot help but remark, "what grand fish, potatoes, peas, beans, fruit, everything." It all seems so much better than at home. It seems better, and much of it is better. The fish and vegetables are as much better as the best beef steak is better than the poorest. They are firmer, richer and fresher. And what shall I say more? Come and see for yourself and then call me an enthusiast if you want to.

ELSEWHERE we give a statement of grain raised in Charlevoix County in 1877, and the acreage of this year. Considering that Charlevoix is the smallest county in the State, the showing is very satisfactory, as is also the increase shown of the acreage of this year over that of last. With such strides as this in grain raising, Charlevoix County cannot but be on the threshold of an importance which shall be recognized. These facts must show conclusively that a flouring mill at this the central marketing point, would even now prove a profitable investment, and in the future a means of securing a fortune. Let it be borne in mind that in addition to the figures given, Charlevoix is the natural grain market for an old and extensive farming country in the Northern part of Antrim County, and which yields many thousand bushels of grain annually. It is believed by experienced men that within three years a mill with four runs of stones would find steady grinding from the grain which will be naturally tributary to this point. Let some one take hold of the matter.

She was an iron vessel of 1,700 tons burthen, and cost $170,000. She was valued this year at $140,000. The canvas was [illegible] insured, and the vessel was insured for $30,000. The breaking of the starboard coupling, and knocking out the side of the vessel was the cause of the accident. No lives were lost. The Java was the steamer commanded by Capt. Dodge, just before he took command of the Van Raalte.

The tug T. W. Perry, from Grand Haven, was here Tuesday with a party of fishermen.

—L. D. Bartholomew, of this place, has purchased the steam yacht Nellie Beach, and put her on Pine lake to run alternate days with the Gazelle.

An important lot is of the property of Petoskey, or of any one, is the development of the surrounding country. Some indications of this latter was seen by your correspondent, on a recent trip to Advance, a little village about 18 miles southwest of Petoskey, on Pine lake.—Petoskey Record.

Petoskey, you know, is the hub, around which revolves all creation and part of Canada. We once heard of a lunatic who imagined himself [illegible] three Petoskey people keep on inflating their imagination they will have Chicago and Charlevoix of secondary importance to Petoskey, and a part of the "surrounding country." Hemph.!

"LITTLE NELLIE."—A seven-year-old child, Nellie Carr, arrived in Detroit a few days ago from St. John, N. B. She traveled the entire distance on the rail (1,700 miles) without any other companion save her "little dolly," and throughout the trip was the pet of all the passengers, through whose watchful care and tender regard the unprotected little waif arrived in safety.—Ex.

Our readers will at once recognize "Little Nellie" as the daughter of Joseph Holland, and the sister child of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Carr, formerly of this place. Mr. Carr died some time ago in New Brunswick, and the child was undoubtedly being returned to the care of her natural father, who resides near Kalamazoo.

Carpenter & Bartholomew's rapidly increasing trade has obliged them to procure more room. They have leased the Morgan property, adjoining their place of business, which they will use for furniture, doors, windows, agricultural implements, etc.

IT was decided at the Cabinet meeting in Washington, on the 9th, that there was no reason whatever why the former orders to the American forces in Texas should not be fully carried out, and the President directed the Secretary of War to telegraph Gen. Ord reiterating existing orders with reference to the protection of American interests, and the prompt pursuit and punishment of any parties making raids across the Rio Grande from Mexico.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Louisiana State Democratic Convention met at Baton Rouge, on the 6th, and adopted a platform indorsing the levee system, the Nicholls Government, the State Funding law and the Congressional Investigating Committee; demanding Governmental aid for the Texas Pacific Railway and the Brazilian Steamship Line; expressing sympathy for the laboring classes; advocating the abolition of National Banks and the substitution of greenbacks for National Bank notes, the same to be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, etc., etc. Four men who offered to sell their votes were expelled from the Convention. E. A. Burke was nominated for State Treasurer.

THE Delaware State Democratic Convention, which met at Dover, on the 6th, nominated John W. Hall for Governor. A hard-money platform was adopted. Resolutions were also adopted denouncing the conspiracy which seats Mr. Hayes, and approving the course of the Potter Investigating Committee.

AT Greenville, S. C., on the 8th, a demand was made by the United States Marshal upon the Sheriff for the surrender to the custody of the United States Court of the three Internal Revenue officers—Kane, Dunham and Moore—under indictment for the killing of an employe of an illicit-distillery who, it is said, was offering resistance to the officers when in the discharge of their duties. The Sheriff refused to release the prisoners himself, but quietly permitted the Marshal to secure the keys. The latter thereupon released the prisoners and at once locked them up again, thus satisfying the writ of habeas corpus, and placing the prisoners in the jurisdiction of the Federal Court.

THE Colorado Republican State Convention met at Denver, on the 8th, and nominated James B. Belford, for Congress; T. W. Pitkin, for Governor; H. A. W. Tabor, for Lieutenant-Governor; N. H. Meldrum, for Secretary of State; M. S. Culver, for Treasurer, and C. W. Wright, for Attorney-General. The platform condemns the seating of Patterson by the last Congress; favors a currency of gold, silver and paper, made equal to value; approves the Resumption act, etc., etc.

THE South Carolina State Republican Convention met at Columbia, on the 8th. The ninth article of the platform which was adopted reads as follows: "We deem it imprudent to nominate candidates for Governor and other State officers because, owing to the anomalous state of affairs in this State, occasioned by ruffle-cuit rule and two years of Democratic supremacy, it is impossible for Republican voters in many counties without incurring great personal danger—to organize for the campaign or to vote at the election when held."

THE Potter Investigating Committee resumed its session in New York City, on the 10th, but in the absence of several members no witnesses were examined. An executive session was held.

ON the 12th, the Evening Post of St. Louis published a statement to the effect that the State Treasurer had, during the whole term of office, carried among his assets a worthless check in the Mastin Bank for $296,000, which was accepted by the Legislative Auditing Committee as cash. This, with other amounts of a like nature, makes a total deficit of over $500,000, in addition to the amounts lost by the failure of the National Bank of the State of Missouri and the Mastin Bank. The Treasurer's bond is said to be practically worthless. The Post's authority for these statements is not given.

A Few Words on Female Education.

Give your daughters a thorough education. Teach them to prepare a nourishing diet. Teach them how to wash, to iron, to darn stockings, to sew on buttons, to make their own dresses. Teach them to bake bread, and that a sponge is better than a spoiled mother's account. Teach them that one dollar is one hundred cents, that one only have up money whose expenses are less than his income, and that all grow poor who have to spend more than they receive. Teach them that a calico dress paid for, fits better than a silk dress unpaid for. Teach them that a full, healthy face displays a greater luster than fifty cosmetic-painted beauties. Teach them to wear strong shoes. Teach them to purchase, and to see that the account corresponds with the purchase. Teach that they ruin God's images by wearing strong bodices. Teach them good common sense, self-trust, self-help and industry. Teach them that an honest mechanic in his working dress is a better object of our esteem than a dozen haughty, flaunting dressed idlers. Teach them gardening and the pleasures of Nature. Teach them, if you can afford it, music, painting and all other arts, but consider these as secondary objects only. Teach them a walk is more salutary than a ride in a carriage, and that wild flowers are a worthy object of admiration. Teach them to reject with disdain all appearance, and to necessity yes or no in good earnest. Teach them that the happiness of matrimony depends neither on external appearance nor on wealth, but on the man's character. Have you instructed your daughters in these principles, and have they comprehended these principles? Fearlessly allow them to marry; they will make their way through the world.—Practical Teacher.

WHAT A STOPPED WATCH DID.

The Recent Accident on the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad Terrible Destruction to Life and Limb.

A special telegram from Pittsburgh, Pa., to the Chicago Tribune of the 9th, gives the following details respecting the fearful railroad slaughter at Mingo Junction, Ohio:

Mingo Junction, a straggling village of fifteen or twenty houses, is situated on the Ohio River, just below the mouth of Cross Creek, and about four miles west from Steubenville, Ohio. Three years ago it was the scene of a frightful railroad accident, in which J. N. McCullough, General Manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and several others, lost their lives. A year later another smash-up occurred, within a few rods of the former one, which sent half a dozen mangled and bleeding victims to their graves. Another horror was added in the list this morning, far surpassing either of the preceding in the number of killed and injured. Most of the victims were English and German immigrants who were on their way to the West.

The accident took place just before daybreak. A dense fog prevailed at the time, which obscured the view and added to the horrors of the situation. The cause of the calamity is attributed to Sterling, conductor of the freight train, who acknowledges that his watch stopped twenty minutes before the collision, but without his knowledge. This caused an error in his calculation of the locality or more manifold bodies, and that the predictive power has exceeded the power of consumption. He figured an error in the calculation of fifty miles to the minute. Consequently, Mr. Peck, of Danbury, Conn., thought that, instead of finding hundreds of millions of dollars in banks, the Government should lend some few hundred millions for circulation among the people. He read a long petition to Congress asking the Government to loan any time $50 to build a house with, the amount to be paid back by installments.

The witness was in favor of repealing the resumption act, of restricted currency, of the Congress and the President, issuing $346 per capita, and of making the circulation equal to that of any one outside the Labor Forces to employ in the United States. He said the cause of the depression was the war, the over-issue of currency, the advance caused by the short period of inflation, and a high protective tariff, all of which had a paralyzing effect upon trade. Others advocated building homes in the West for the unemployed. This plan was in charge of Conductor Edward Morrill, of Columbus, and being behind time, was running unusually fast. At Mingo Junction, at 1:50 a. m., just after passing Cross Creek, where the road leaves the Ohio River, and while rounding a sharp curve on the west bank of the creek, the train dashed with fearful velocity into freight train No. 13, Conductor Sterling, which was off for time, the conductor's watch, it is said, having stopped twenty minutes without his knowledge. The trains rushed together with a fearful crash. Both engines were demolished and thrown down a steep embankment thirty feet. The first passenger was completely wrecked, three of the four engineers killed and the other badly injured. The second passenger was more fortunate, being only thrown down the embankment, where it stands on end. All the baggage cars were badly shivered. The baggage car was a total wreck, the baggage-masters escaping without injury. The emigrant car, in which the greatest loss of life occurred, was completely demolished.

A large crowd soon gathered from the country for miles around, coming in buggies, wagons, on horse-back and afoot. The people were on hand with all possible promptness to render assistance to the wounded, dead and dying. Everything was done that could be done to alleviate the sufferings of the injured, who were placed on a special train and taken to Steubenville. Both of the engines were broken, twisted and wrecked, and the engineers killed outright. One of the engineers was a man of old from Very few in the emigrant car escaped death or injury. The scene at the wreck was terrible. The groans of the dead and sobs and screams of the living rose above the noise of the falling rain. Before the first special train had taken to Steubenville

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Aug. 23, 1878.

Editor Sentinel:

New York is shortly to have the privilege of listening to the voice of Dennis Kearney. It says the Occident sends greeting to the Orient, and will instruct it in the ways of—San Francisco. The Hoodlum must prevail. Everybody who is not with us must stand aside. And in good sooth with the fire brand that is slumbering in the socialistic, communistic, spiritualistic elements, this same Dennis Kearney is a man whose preachee looks no good. He would fan the elements of discontent into a conflagration that would sweep the land having in its train the torch of the incendiary, and the knife of the assassin. There is no argument in his ravings. He appeals only to the worst passions. Reason has no part in his programme. Whatever stands between him and his aims must perish. It would appear as though he is the special element in one of those great cyclone of disaster and revolution that for some purpose is allowed periodically to sweep over every land.

Something more practical, and bearing in its bosom the germ of common sense, and a return to prosperity is the meeting of the Bankers' Association, held at Saratoga, lately. The gentlemen who compose this association are a guarantee that even if no immediate good should follow their deliberations, no harm will be done, and the airing of views may suggest practical means for relieving the country of its embarrassment. The Business Committee have already sent out 110,000 sealed letters and 310,000 circulars and printed papers, containing suggestions as to the proper means of arriving at a resumption of specie payments among those who give their views as to the best measures in their opinion to be taken, were O. C. Hale, cashier of the State National Bank of Keokuk; J. D. Hayes of Detroit; George Walker; President Charles B. Hall of Boston, and others. Among the more prominent gentlemen present were Messrs. B. P. Rhaum of Philadelphia; B. B. Sherman of New York; David A. Wells and Geo. A. Buller of New Haven; Bailey Williams of Pittsburgh; G. C. Barrett of Louisville, and Mr. Torre of Honesdale.

The proposed reforms so positively promised by the reformers when they secured their present official positions in the city government, have never been in any manner carried out, and to-day we occupy the anomalous position of a thoroughly reformed city badly in need of reformation. A reference to the files of the city papers will show that never before was crime so rampant, so bold and apparently so seldom punished as at this time, and it is an open secret that, at least some of the police department are in open collusion with the thieves. Take for instance the King robbery in Vesey street, mentioned last week. Those who are most familiar with the surroundings of the case, say openly that the police authorities could have recovered the stolen money and bonds before this, but that they are not satisfied with the reward, which is $5,000, for the recovery of $30,000. It is plain to be seen that the police and detectives are on the best possible terms with the very class against whose depredations they are employed to watch.

Edison is not the only wonderfully inventive genius the world possesses. Another scientific phenomenon has come to the surface in the person of a Mr. James Grasham, who not only proposes to take the photograph of an individual, or a ship, or other object from 500 to 5,000 miles distant, but will also furnish the exact latitude and longitude of the object. So you see, that should any vessel be derelict hereafter, all that is necessary is to call upon Mr. Grasham, and he will give her whereabouts and condition in a jiffy.

The method proposed by Mr. Grasham or rather the principle involved, is as old as the eternal hills, and the only wonder is that it has not been thought of before. The story of the spectre of the Brocken is familiar to every child, and even the oldest inhabitant remembers having read of that ghost in his early youth. Mr. Grasham's method is to produce an artificial mirage, and the thing is done. The way it was discovered was this. A little over a year ago, while preparing asphalt for the roofing of a house, the cauldron was upset, and contents taking fire, sent an immense mass of dense black smoke rolling heavenward. Suddenly a sunbeam shot through the dense cloud, and looking up he saw distinctly a brig which was lying at Hunter's Point, and which was on fire. He plainly saw the men throwing water on the fire; saw the boat; saw gangs of men at work casting off lines from adjacent schooners, and every surrounding, just as distinctly as though he were on the spot. He immediately went to work, and has demonstrated to his own satisfaction at least, that an artificial mirage can be produced which will reproduce objects a few miles distant. The same can be effected on a larger scale, by means of weak objects at any given distance can be photographed.

The New York Custom House is again quiet. At the time of the change in Collectors here, I referred to the tumult the transfer occasioned. This excitement has died away. Gen. Merritt accepted the position with the intention of running the Custom House on a business basis—just as a clear headed manager would control the outgoings and incomings of any large mercantile establishment. Collector Merritt has all the elements necessary for popularity. He has no impregnable inner sanctum, but opens his doors to receive any comers. Merchants appreciate this, and already the business men of New York heartily endorse the new Collector. There ought not to be any possession in Congress next winter to interfere with the confirmation of such a man as Gen. Merritt.

It is a well recognized fashion to pooh pooh the physical achievements of these days, and to intimate generally that our strong men now are only pigmies beside the giants of a few generations back. But I would like to ask of such scoffers at nineteenth century development, who in—history was ever known to swim eighteen miles without stopping? That is what a Bowery photographer named Dimmers accomplished on Monday last. Having previously made a good record as a swimmer, Dimmers challenged any man in the world to swim with him from Harlem Bridge to the northern extremity of Manhattan Island down through the East River and across New York Bay to Staaton Island, the whole distance being as stated, eighteen miles. This challenge was accepted by a professional swimmer named Tuelf, and at precisely ten Monday morning the two men took simultaneous "headers" from Harlem Bridge into the water. Shortly after passing the Battery Tuelf was taken with cramps and had to be hauled into his attendant's boat while Dimmers kept on at full speed landing on Staten Island after a trip of five hours and a half, and thereby winning $300 and the title of "Champion Long Distance Swimmer of the United States"—a more formidable title, in point of size at least, than the President's.

Mention has been made of the schemes devised by certain men, to ameliorate the condition of the suffering poor who are crowding the large cities, and who are too and have for a long time been out of employment. A wealthy philanthropist of this city has purchased 1,600 acres of land in a Western State, which has subdivided into tracts of 40 acres each. He is taking poor families of known good character, and is transporting them to, and locating them upon this land, the only condition being that they will not only abstain from the use of liquors themselves, but will prevent its being sold in the colony. Some gentlemen of experience are urging up the general government to furnish transportation to poor families to the unoccupied lands in the West; furnish them with seeds, farming utensils and stock, and when they shall have repaid the actual cash outlay, advanced to them, without interest, a title to the land shall be given them for a homestead of 160 acres. This land will then be taxable, and be a source of revenue to the government.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you,—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Three doses will relieve you.

The Decision of Sec'y Schurz.

THE supervision and general oversight of the public lands of the United States are assigned to the Department of the Interior, and it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to see to it that all the laws relating thereto are duly executed. Acting in this character and under the powers of his office, Sec'y Schurz has recently made a decision which, in its principle, applies to all the unsold lands of the Central Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Kansas Pacific and the Denver Pacific Railroad Companies, amounting, in the aggregate, to nearly twenty-nine millions of acres. The effect of this decision, if intimately sustained, is to open those lands to settlement and pre-emption under the Pre-emption laws of the United States, at the Government price, which is $1.25 per acre.

The particular application of the decision relates to the land-grant made to the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, or rather to the company to whose rights it has succeeded. The third section of the act making the grant provides "that there be and is hereby granted to the said company . . . every alternate section of public lands," etc., . . . subject to the condition that "all such lands so granted by this section which shall not be sold or disposed of by said company, within three years after the road shall have been completed, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption, like other lands, at a price not exceeding one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, to be paid to said company." This road was completed and accepted by the President, in 1872. The decision of Sec'y Schurz is that the lands remaining unsold after three years thereafter are, under the provision of this section, open to settlement and purchase, under the Pre-emption laws of the United States, and at the price named, the proceeds from any such sales to be paid over to the company. The Secretary's theory is not that the lands granted remaining unsold after the time specified revert back to the Government; but that the Government has the right to sell them to pre-emptors, like any public lands, at the price named. The provision, as he holds, was wisely designed to prevent the company from refusing to sell the lands except at exorbitant prices, and enable the Government, after the lapse of three years from the completion of the road, to place the unsold portion of these lands on the basis, as to sale, as that which applies to public lands generally.

The whole question turns upon the construction of the phrase "which shall not be sold or disposed of by said company." Sec'y Schurz treats the words "disposed of" as simply equivalent to the word "sold;" and if he is correct in this particular then his decision is clearly right. It was the intention of Congress that the lands remaining unsold by the company after the lapse of three years from the completion, of the road should, as to the right of settlement and purchase, come under the operation of the Pre-emption laws of the United States, and that the company should not retain the extra sixty cents per acre against those laws. Such is the position taken by Sec'y Schurz.

The Secretary has been both sharply criticised and warmly commended for this decision. Those who have criticised take the ground that the words "or disposed of by said company" refer to some other disposition of these lands than that of actual sale, and, hence, are not the equivalent of the word "sold" which immediately precedes them. They claim that mortgaging the lands to secure bonds issued money is disposing of them within the meaning of the law, and that, inasmuch as all these lands are thus mortgaged, they are "disposed of" in the sense contemplated by the law, and, hence, are not subject, any more than lands actually sold, to the Pre-emption laws of the United States. They are covered by a mortgage, duly executed, and, therefore, subject to the legal and equitable rights of the mortgagees. It must be confessed that there is force and plausibility in this view of the case.

It is hardly to be supposed that a question of so much importance and involving so many interests will be left to rest simply on the decision of Sec'y Schurz. It will, doubtless, in some form, reach the Supreme Court of the United States, for final determination.
—N. Y. Independent.

Speaking of this decision of Sec'y Schurz, the Chicago Tribune says it will open to private purchase about 20,000,000 acres of land, at $1.25 per acre. The Tribune then gives an abstract of the present Land laws of the country, and says:

From these particulars it will be seen that any adult person may pre-empt any portion of the public land to the extent of 160 acres of land held at $1.25 an acre, or eighty acres held at $2.50 per acre, and pay for the same, without interest, at the end of thirty-three months after taking possession.

Or, under the Homestead law, every adult may enter 160 acres of $1.25 land, or eighty acres of $2.50 land, without cost, on the condition of cultivating and occupying the same five years.

Or a soldier, or the widow of a soldier, or the minor children of a soldier can enter for a free of cost, or open market, or private entry at $1.25 per acre for cash, or under pre-emption, in farms of 160 acres, free of cost, or open market, or private entry at $1.25 per acre for cash, or under pre-emption, in farms of 160 acres, at $1.25 per acre, with thirty-three months' credit without interest. In addition, there are 3,000,000 acres of State lands for sale on ten years' time, and 1,500,000 acres of railroad land on eleven years' time. All this is in the one State of Kansas. In Nebraska, Minnesota and Dakota, the lands of all kinds—railroad, State and public lands—are even of greater extent, and, for the most part, all capable of immediate cultivation, easy of access, with facilities of travel, transportation and postal and telegraph service wholly unknown to the people, yet living and filled up Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri. Dakota is twice the size of Minnesota, and as large as Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Kansas is twice as large as Indiana, and Nebraska has about the same dimensions. In Kansas and Nebraska there are many counties not yet settled to any extent, and where colonies or organizations of six, ten or twenty families migrate together they can have their lands selected by an agent for them in one body, thus forming a community, and if they purchase the land from the railroads, or from the State, can secure the most liberal terms and long credit, or if they take under the Pre-emption laws, each will have thirty-three months' time in which to pay for the land, or if they take under the Homestead law, can be of mutual assistance in the way of labor and means until they can begin to produce. In all such cases the larger the number moving together the greater will they will be to each other, the better terms they can make; but in every case they ought to have their lands selected by a trusted agent beforehand, and then move directly to it. Wherever there are men wanting land, with the intention of laboring thereon, the land is abundant, easily reached, obtainable on any terms; and in every case they will find liberal hands prompt to help them on their way.

Old Drinking Cups and Customs.

Drinking from the same cup by several individuals is an old custom which is still kept alive in Italy and in all parts of Germany, and is not unknown in England among those classes who are lovers of malt liquor and drink it "from the pewter." When a friend meets another in a coffee-house or tavern, the one who has already ordered something does not issue a second order for his friend, but holds out the vessel for the newcomer. The German and the English pewter mug will also show the popular feeling in favor of one large vessel for a friendly party. The formula of Saxon politeness which consisted in two drinkers employing the same vessel is well known. The first who drank said Wass bei (Here's health to you), and the one who received the goblet, before emptying it, said Drink heil (I drink your health). From the "Roman de Rou," it appears that this was customary among the English as late as the twelfth century. There were banquets mounted on feet, in the form of a chalice, others were mounted on three feet, and others still were made in the form of a bowl or cup. Some were made with covers, others without, and the materials employed in their construction were as varied as their shapes. The hanap was particularly used by persons of high social position; the tankard, with handle, being the more popular vessel. And such was the fear of poison in the Middle Ages, that a great personage was served from a hanap with a cover which could be used as a vessel, from which cover the servant drank a little of the liquor, which he poured from the goblet for that purpose. These precautions clearly proved the insufficient, and preservatives against poisoning were sought after under the most absurd pretentions. The fabulous horn known as the unicorn or licorne was thought to be the enemy of everything impure. People fancied that by passing their beverages to be served them in vases made of the horn of the magical beast, they could easily detect the presence of poison in their drink. Handles were made, as they thought, of this material for knives; for it was said that blood would exude from horn and bone of the licorne, when brought in contact with poisoned meats. The long sword of the narwhal, when brought to Europe, was thought to be the horn of the unicorn; and it is probable the fossil ivory of many kinds was also sold under the same name. Well appointed houses possessed a large number of hanaps. The inventory, engraved in 1380, of the household of Charles V. of France, surnamed the Wise, describes four gold hanaps and as many covers, weighing in all nearly thirty-six marcs, and 177 tankards of gilded silver, nearly all enameled and weighing in the aggregate 503 marcs of silver. Some of these vessels were provided with air-tight covers, as they were intended to be carried about with already prepared drinks. Among northern Nations they were sometimes made of marble-wood, and beautifully carved. —Scribner's Monthly.

Danger From Lightning.

Under what conditions is damage from lightning powerless, and what are the means by which the risk can be lessened or avoided? An isolated tree, standing either upon a wide plain or upon an eminence, is obviously likely to undergone a lightning discharge, to "attract the lightning," to use a common expression. The top of the tree is the nearest point to the cloud, and since the tree is a better conductor than the air, a line drawn vertically through it to the cloud marks the shortest and easiest course along which the electricities may pass. If, when the charged cloud arrives directly over this point, the extension is sufficient to overcome the resistance along that line, a discharge will take place and the tree will be struck. But if the tension be not sufficient, the cloud will pass harmlessly over. Hence it appears that a person standing during a thunder-storm beneath a tree so situated is exposed to some risk. On no account, therefore, should the traveler take refuge under an isolated tree; generally he will do well to avoid its neighborhood altogether; but should he be overtaken by the storm when on a plain, with no shelter near, the tree may still be made to afford him some protection. If to take up a position near it, but not under its branches, he will probably escape unhurt should the lightning descend upon it. The safest distance from the tree is the height of it—that is equal to its height. To approach nearer than this is to incur the risk of being within the influence of the stroke; to remain at a much greater distance away is to place one's self in the same conditions of isolation as the tree itself. It will have been remarked by all observers of the phenomenon that whenever a tree has been struck by lightning it has generally occupied an isolated position. In describing the position as one of isolation, however, it is not meant that the tree is necessarily standing alone, but that it is not one of a numerous group. When there are many trees together, their relative conductivity is often sufficient to cause an indestructive discharge of the electricity. This is especially apt to happen when the trees are wet with rain, for then their surfaces are covered with a film of water, which is a good conductor. For this reason, the danger from lightning is much less after rain has begun to fall, than before, when everything is dry. A person is also in comparative safety in the midst of a thicket of the tallest trees he avoided. In such a place of shelter the traveler may take refuge in full assurance that he will be there be effectually shielded from harm. The greatest risk of injury from lightning is undoubtedly incurred by persons traveling across a wide and very flat plain, because in such a situation they are the only elevated objects. To lessen this risk, which may here be somewhat serious, advantage should be taken of whatever undulations of surface may exist, to keep upon the lowest ground. No doubt the prostrate position would in these circumstances afford greater security than the erect. It happens not unfrequently that animals are killed by lightning under a tree to which they had broken themselves for shelter. But when the tree is struck partly in consequence of its isolation, and partly on account of the presence of the animals beneath it. Usually there are several, and often many of them assembled together, huddled probably by the fear of being left one with another. The air, heated by their bodies, rises above them laden with moisture, derived mainly from their breaths. Who has not noticed the cloud of vapor that in the early morning and in certain states of the weather hangs over a flock of sheep or a herd of kine? The column of moist air ascending through the branches of the tree toward the clouds offers, in consequence of the comparatively high conductivity of water, favorable passage for the electricity. A herd of cattle, under such circumstances, is exposed to a double risk; also, it is evident that these animals are in the open country less subject to injury than human beings, who cannot affect the atmosphere in a like degree.—Chambers' Journal.

Elijah's Words of Wisdom.

Bijah now devotes one hour per day to receiving calls from people in sorrow and distress and in need of sympathy and advice. A little woman, with a sharp face and a long chin nose was admitted. She had been weeping. There was a quiver to her chin as she folded her fan, and she sighed with a terrible dreariness as she took a chair and began: "Mr. Joy, you see before you the wreck of a once happy wife."

"Once happy wife, but now perfectly reckless, even about new hats. I see, madam—proceed," he replied.

"My husband is out every night till almost midnight," she continued, as the tears came. "Once he called me darling; now he refers to me as Sarah Jane. Once he patted my head and praised me; now I can't come near him but he wants to know if I have been eating onions again. It has been growing on him for a whole year, and today I am the saddest woman in Detroit. What shall I do—what can I do?"

He solemnly picked up the dictionary, looked under the head of "Z" for a few minutes, and closing the book leaned back and said: "Madam, I find nothing in Noah Webster's writings bearing on your case, but I think I see the remedy. When you go home give the house a good sweeping, and don't leave any apple cores or baseball clubs in the corners. Then put on a tidy dress, pin a clean collar around your neck, shine up your ear-rings, tie on a nice white apron, and as you hear the old boy coming up the path be ready to meet him with a pleasant smile. He might strike up a lively song and give him the biggest smile you can and not increase the size of your mouth. That's my remedy, madam, and if you'll try it I'll bet you a wooden leg against a paper of pins that he'll light his pipe after supper, take a seat beside you on the porch and start out with pet names containing four syllables."

She was red in the face as she paused, but she remembered that she had only two hair-pins in her head, one shoe was untied, and there were coffee-stain spots on her dress in plain sight, and she cooled her temper, and said: "Maybe it is my fault, and I'll follow your advice."

"Do, madam. Nothing so discourages a husband as to come home at night and find an old corset under the table, a dog collar and a bear-trap on the lounge, and a slipshod wife thumping around with the camphor-bottle in one hand and the lint-pin in the other, and wishing some peddler would come along with cinnamon essence. Goodday, madam—come back if it doesn't work."—Detroit Free Press

Daring Speculators.

The fascination of the Stock Exchange is constantly leading men to abandon regular business in order to improve the rapid way of getting rich. This class cannot be made to understand that whatever is cheered in Wall street is at the equal loss of another. Then there is a retribution of very certain character following in the track of Wall street stock jobbers to a permanent feature in the history of the street. This is shown by the fact that the very sharpest men eventually prove the speculators. The most brilliant gains, indeed, turn to loss in the moment when hope is looking for its fruition. Perhaps the saddest of all disasters of which New York is capable might be included in the narrow precinct of the Stock Exchange. Among the unexpressed miseries of the little "three sticks" is that of H. J. Fowler, who has been one of the most active operators of the present day. For a few years he has been alternating amid tremendous fluctuations. At one time he had a long run of success, and was the envy of the community of a multimaire. Then luck took a change, and he began to lose. He could not stop, however, for this is hardly possible. The infatuation of the speculator forbids it as long as a dollar is left. Fowler was the slave of that habit which he had created, and the bondage never ceased until his whole capital was gone. Probably if he had enough to try another chance, he would again be in the speculating crowd. Another instance is found in Alden B. Stockwell, who, for a time, made a powerful sensation in Wall street. He operated boldly in Pacific Mail and other fancies, and was at the same time a principal agent in the sale of saving machine shops. He pursued the usual career of a Wall street speculator until every dollar he could raise was lost, and recently the assets have been sold at auction for the benefit of his creditors. The list illustrates the usual style. Twenty thousand shares of fancy stock of various names and schemes sold in different lots for an aggregate of $82, which is small to the sum, is more than that; are worth.—*N. Y. Cor. Fighting Flames in a Coal-Mine.

A woman driven from other habitations made her home in an otherwise unused drift of Butler colliery, near Hyde Park, Pa. The fire in the coal ovens cooked her meals spread to the mine fully a year and a half ago. The mine was so situated that water could not be introduced to flood it, nor was smothering by steam successful. The fire threatened to extend to mines of the Pennsylvania and Delaware and Hudson Companies. Warned that it would be held accountable for damages, the latter company adopted a plan of isolating the fire. A deep trench, in the shape of a horse-shoe, was dug around the fire, through layers of rock and coal, to the clay. A brick wall six feet thick fills this trench, and the fire is thus cut off from new fuel. It is calculated that fully 500,000 tons of coal have been consumed in this burning mine. The Town of Pittson would in time have been burned under had not the barriers. The land surface under which the fire has raged presents a picture of desolation. It is a barren, indeed, turn to loss in the moment when hope is looking for its fruition. Perhaps the saddest of all disasters of which New York is capable might be included in the narrow precinct of the Stock Exchange. A Railroad Round the World.

The following outline of a railroad scheme is given by a Mississippi correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal:

"There is a great railroad, which, if it can be built, will enlighten all other enterprises in that line, and will be the grandest railroad in the world, connecting the Old and New World, and thus avoiding the dangers of the Atlantic Ocean. My road will connect the American Continent with Asia and Europe, beginning thus: Start at the railroad from Washington City to St. Petersburg, with only forty miles of water between these great cities of the New and Old World.

"My plan is for the United States, Great Britain and Russia, or the capitalists of these great countries, to construct this road. Let the road be built to some point on the line between Washington Territory and the British Possessions, say, where the Columbia River runs into Washington Territory. Then let England, or English capitalists, build the road through New Georgia to the point where the Youcan River runs into Alaska; and then through Alaska to Cape Prince of Wales on Behring Strait; then let Russia, or the company composed of the great capitalists of the Old and New World, construct the road from East Cape, or Behring Strait, to St. Petersburg. Passengers and freight can be shipped from Cape Prince of Wales, America, to East Cape, Asia, directly opposite and only forty miles apart, in splendid steamers, built and put there for that purpose, and owned by this great company. Would not this be grand? Just imagine a trip from America to Asia and Europe, seated in splendid cars, with land under you and visible all the way, except forty miles apart as for as from Dover to Calais.

"If this great road could be built the danger of the stormy Atlantic would be avoided, and hundreds and thousands of noble men, women and children would be almost annually saved, as well as millions of treasure."

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A little boy, in Baltimore, was literally pinched to death by the mother of one of his playmates, with whom he had quarreled. She pinched his arm so terribly that the swellings reached the shoulder, and eventually caused the lad's death.

—A few days ago, a mule used for plow-work on the Connor place, one of the largest cotton plantations on the Brazos River, Tex., was bitten by a wolf. The latter animal acted very strangely at the time, coming in from the prairie and attacking his unhealthy with his teeth, holding on till kicked loose. The wolf was rabid, as was subsequently shown by the mule being taken with unmistakable symptoms of hydrophobia.

—While dressing to go to Wilkesbarre to witness a recent celebration, Rev. C. E. Fessenden, of Catawissa, dropped his penknife, with the blade open, into his boot. Being in somewhat of a hurry, he did not notice where the knife fell, and when he pulled on his boot felt something cutting his foot. He drew off the boot and found the knife fell with the handle to the heel and the point of the blade to the toe, and, sometime the old genuine article—the more he pulled to get the boot off the more the knife cut his foot. Finally the boot was removed, and he placed on more he pulled to get the boot off the more the knife cut his foot. Finally the boot was removed, and he placed on his foot a handkerchief to stop the blood, which was flowing freely. He then proceeded to Wilkesbarre, and only felt the pain of the wound after the excitement was over.

—A few days ago three boys, aged respectively eighteen, fifteen and twelve, slipped into the house of Mr. Sterling Jenkins, who lives on the Tullbutton road, and stole a watch and some other valuables. Mr. Jenkins tracked and overtook them in Hamilton. He recovered his property, but did not desire to put the parents in jail, so he told them that if they would whip each other he would not prosecute them. This they agreed to do, and were taken out, stripped to the waist, and provided with stout hickory switches. One was tied to a tree, and the other two laid on his back with the switches until Mr. Jenkins expressed himself satisfied. The ceremony was gone through with with one. They were then dispersed with smarting backs and positive hearts. They said that their mother worked in the fields here, and that their father was dead.—Tullbotton (Ga.) Times.

—We learn that near the plantation of Mr. Turner a most singular scene occurred, a few days since, between a fierce alligator and a rattlesnake. It appears that his snakeship first saw the 'gator, and leaping the distance with a single bound, he erected the latter's attention. Then began the charming process, which lasted fully half an hour, during which time the latter put his head twice or thrice, but was immediately called to order by the rattles of the former, and at the end of the half hour, with fixed eyes, the alligator moved slowly toward his terribleenemy, until within striking distance, when he made a powerful scientific onset, and with all the strength he could muster struck the alligator. For a time the alligator shook angrily and furiously, and then as if by magic made a semi-circling backward movement precedent to their gastronomical fight. In a minute more the would-be assassin with a recoil foiul to the nerves of the rattler. Our informant then dispatched the latter, and found the fangs of the snake's strike—he had missed his mark. The snake measured six feet, and had fifty-seven rattles and one button.—Lake City (Fla.) Reporter.

VEGETINE.

What the composition the medicinal virtues of a dozen or more carefully selected barks, roots and herbs exist, and all of these potent are so strongly concentrated, and their curative properties so thoroughly extracted, that their combined action is always uniform, positive and pleasant in the most delicate and confined cases. It should be said, also, that VEGETINE contains no mineral or any salt, and no opium, morphine, nor anything else of a hurtful narcotic nature. Whatever power for good it possesses is due to the beneficial, vegetable properties of the roots, barks and herbs of which it is made. Its wonderful power over diseases is thus explained, and which are controlled by it, and made harmonious by human agency and skill. VEGETINE works in all seasons of the year, in all climates, on all ages and sexes, and it does so mildly, surely and speedily that all suffering soon cease. Vegetine purifies the blood, which, coursing through every vein and fibre of the body, carries to every part the elements of health or disease. Vegetine acts upon the blood, the source of all the processes. It is the first to be relied upon for the cure of scrofula in many forms. To scrofula, in all its varieties, Vegetine is especially adapted. Vegetine is more than a simple remedy for blood disease, and such is the case. We may say, then, that

Republican County Convention

A Republican County Convention to nominate candidates for County officers, will be held at the Town Hall in the village of Charlevoix, on Thursday the 5th day of September, 1878, at one o'clock in the afternoon. Each Township will be entitled to one delegate for every twenty registered voters, and every fraction of twenty over ten. Each delegation will bring, in addition to their credentials a certified copy of the number of voters in their respective Townships. The County Committee, at their last meeting, passed the following resolution:

Resolved: That we recommend to the several Township Committees that that they give at least six days notice of their caucuses by posting written notices in at least three of the most conspicuous places in the Township.

That there may be a full and fair representation of the Republican voters, it is hoped that the recommendation will be strictly observed.

ROBERT MILLER,
Chairman Rep. Co. Com.
Charlevoix, Aug. 12, 1878.

TWO GOOD OFFICERS.—If experience is worth anything anywhere it is in public stations. We hope Charlevoix county will continue in office for another term the present Treasurer, Byron See. He has served the people faithfully and well, and his experience has given him an intimate knowledge of the difficult duties of his office.

Two years ago A. R. Upright was elected Clerk and Register, and the opposition of the SENTINEL to his election is on record. To-day we record a desire to see him re-elected to the position. He has proven himself attentive, faithful, and fully competant Charlevoix county owes to Mr. Upright a recognition of his faithful stewardship.

WE personally asserted some time since that the "dark lantern" process was being used largely in the primary canvas for Representative and county officers. We now assert it editorially. In Eveline the Township caucus was secretly held by a narrow circle of zealous politicians, and the people had no voice in the selection of their delegate. It was prized by this secret conclave that the large delegate should act at the county convention for the nomination of county officers. If we are incorrect let the chairman of the Township Committee rise and explain.

Republicans throughout the State will be glad to learn of the renomination of Hon. O. D. Conger for Congress in the Port Huron district. Mr. Conger has the position of a recognized leader in the House, and his influence is not only of vast importance in his State but to the Nation. This comes from two things, the sterling integrity and staunch Republicanism of the man, and the good sense of the Republicans of his district, who, having found a good Representative, keep him in service, thus securing a trained legislator. The 9th District can well emulate the example of the Republicans of Mr. Conger's District, by again placing Hr. Hubbell in nomination, who ranks with Mr. Conger among the leaders of the House of Representatives.

FIVE millions more of the five twenty bonds are called in by the Secretary of the Treasury. Thus the burden of interest is reduced $100,000 per annum more. These things are what make the "Nationals" as "mad as March hares."

CARELESS SURVEYS.—A correspondent writes that the people of the Northern counties of the State are suffering seriously from careless surveys. The original lines are so timecurately drawn that a resurvey was necessary, and the errors of the Government surveyors have been multiplied by their local successors. The uncertainty became so great that the Hon. Geo. E. Steele, Surveyor of Antrim county, wrote to the Secretary of State for the standard yard measure which the statute says shall be kept in the State archives, and he received an answer that there was a stick there said to be a yard in length, but nobody appeared to know certainly whether it was or not. Mr. Steele then applied to the Government at Washington, and at considerable expense got the Government standard of linear measure, a steel rod attested to be exactly six feet long. With this he has tested a number of surveyor's chains, not one of which was found to be correct, the links lengthening by wear. One chain which had been in long and constant use was found to be four and one eighth inches too long in thirty three feet. In surveying a quarter section by notes and bounds with this chain the error would amount to three and SIXTY two one hundredths acres, or in surveying a road ten miles long the error would amount to eighteen rods. When the survey is made not by notes and bounds but by bisecting a line already surveyed, of course the error would not appear. Another chain was found to be two and three twenty-sixths inches too long, and a third about two inches. The confusion which must result from the use of chains is almost incalculable.—Grand Rapids Eagle

AN EXAMPLE.—Here is an instance of what industry and pluck will do. Ten years ago, David Hogan, of South Arm, landed at Charlevoix with his family, worse off than nothing, having been compelled to borrow $28.00 to pay freight on his household effects. To day he has a farm of 160 acres of land, 94 acres of which are under improvement. This fall he has 500 bushels of wheat 700 bushels of oats, 3000 bushels of turnips, and an abundance of other crops, and the best of all he is out of debt. This country wants a few more David Hogans.

French heel slippers at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

BEAR.—Some one saw a bear in the suburbs of the village, one day last week and immediately every able bodied man was out with a weapon of some kind. The bear made good his escape, but Walter Mannay narrowly escaped injury by the flying out of the breech of his gun, which he fired off at the close of the chase.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

THE Cabinet at Washington, on the 19th, approved the Universal Postal Treaty recently concluded at Paris.

A BOLD and daring train robbery was perpetrated about half past one o'clock, on the morning of the 13th, about one mile below Winthrop Junction, opposite Atchison, Kan. Four men boarded the passenger train bound south, at Winthrop Junction, getting on the platform between the baggage car and the first coach. When the conductor started to go through the train from the baggage-car, the leader of the four men pointed two revolvers toward him and ordered him back into the baggage-car. The robbers then entered the car and ordered the baggage-man and a young man with him to hold up their hands, which they did. Frank Baxter, express agent, was sitting in a chair in the lighted end of the car, his bills in his lap and the express safe open beside him, busy with his work, when a revolver was suddenly thrust in his face, and he was ordered to hold up his hands. The leader of the gang then deliberately transferred the money in the safe, about $2,000, to a sack he had with him. While the bandits lined up in his face they then ordered the conductor to stop the train, and he pulled the bell-rope. As the train slowed up the robbers backed out of the car, still covering the inmates with their pistols, and disappeared in the darkness. The entire work was done in five minutes, and none of the many passengers on the train knew of the robbery until the perpetrators had escaped.

The Pacific Railroad, through counsel, requested to be allowed a hearing against the decision, before the regulations were promulgated, and the Secretary gave them until the 1st of Nov. to file their arguments. This action on the part of the company was considered to be an indication that they intended to fight the Secretary's decision at every stage of the proceedings which might be taken under it.

The Alcalde of Newtown was informed by Lieutenant Col. Young to hunt all of the river, when he stated that Arcola stole cattle from Texas for a living, and took them to Mexico and sold them—the regular Mexican troops being the purchasers, the Mexican officers knowing them to be stolen. The Alcalde also gave information implicating high Mexican officials in the robberies. Owing to high water, part of McKenzie's forces failed to cross, and the trail of the stock being obliterated, Col. Young's command was forced to return.

The restoration of silver to the coinage, even in a limited degree with the decline of wages and markets prices, the increase of usury, taxation and other oppressive and official fees and perquisites, the practice of which is a reproach to a Government founded upon the just and thorough investigation into any and all alleged abuses of publicists.

The Modern Little Girl.

SHE begins life by taking airings in a new-fashioned baby-carriage, wrapped up in an afghan, and propelled on her way by a smart nurse-maid, who takes this opportunity of flirting with questionable admirers, and making appointments for future flirtations.

As the little girl progresses, she copies her mamma, and the other ladies of her set. She will want to wear "pink back" by the time she is four years old, and kid-gloves at six, certainly.

Her soft hair will be tortured with "loads" and crimping plus by the time it is grown long enough to wind around anything, and if it escapes the vile processes of the curling iron, we may consider it a lucky circumstance.

The modern little girl wants to be a young lady as soon as possible. She sighs for the time when she can have a reception, and wear a train, and carry a fan, and have footmen bouquets sent to her by youthful admirers.

She reads novels by gaslight, and when she is found her pillow when older people come in her vicinity. She has her ideal hero six feet tall, with hair and eyes like the raven's wing, and a melancholy face, caused by "carking care," and the want of a good bed to sleep in, for your hero of that description is found prowling around old ruins and beside haunted caves, gazing at the moon and bewailing his lonely condition.

The modern little girl wears corsets by the time she is ten years old, and is particular about the fit of her boots, and the way her overskirt hangs.

She could not think of helping her mother wash the dishes, or put the rooms to rights, because housework spoils the hands, and dusting will dodge dust in the hair.

When she is called upon for any menial service, she is offended, and she must get all those French exercises written before to-morrow morning. But when some young friends come for her to go and play croquet, she makes up new file, and goes with them, and plays till twelve o'clock at night easily enough, and does not get tired—does not, no indeed! Playing croquet is such delightful exercise.

She knows all the gossip of the town as well as any of her elders, and she can talk over the broken matches, and the divorces suits, and the various other scandals with the best of them.

She has a great deal to say about beaus, and speaks of setting her cap for this one, and that one, and negotiates all single women over twenty as "cattish old maids," and wonders what they are always poking themselves into society for.

By way of accomplishments she plays on the piano, and every luckless caller that comes to see her mother must have his or her ears bored with waltzes and marches, thumped out in time of the most distracting kind with small regard to anything but noise.

The modern little girl ignores all girls younger than herself. They are children, and she will not associate with them. She does not care for juvenile parties, she prefers entertainments which are not "so awfully dull," and where they dance something besides those horrid quadrilles, and where they play euchre, or some game more interesting than dominoes.

She likes to stay at parties of that kind until other folks go home, and not be hurried away by "ma" before eleven o'clock, just like a little girl! and she will turn in bed half the next day, and in two days be ready for just such another event.

By the time she is twenty she is passé and faded, and if she marries, she is totally unfit for the duties of wife and mother; but she is fashionable, and quite up to the times, and many claims have we old fogies to say anything about her?—Kate Thorn, in N. Y. Weekly.

THERE is something solemn in the tones of a great bell striking midnight, especially if you are a mile from home, and know that your wife is sitting behind the hall-door waiting for you.

MOSS ROSES.

White with the whiteness of the snow,
Pink with the faintest rosy glow,
They blossom on their spray.
They gild the lumbers with their bloom,
And sweeten with their rich perfume
The mossy garden-ways.

The dew that from their brimming leaves
Drips down the mignonette receives,
And sweeter grows thereby.
The silly bees flies stand among
In raiment white and gold, and hear
The purple pansies lie.

Wrens scrupulous glitters rear all
On daisied sward and piled wall,
Like bits, gems, frost;
While flitting round each garden-bed,
With joyous laugh and airy tread,
A fairer sunbeam goes.

A little human blossom, bright
With childish, innocent delight
Of life yet in its dawn,
With sunshine prisoned in her hair,
With heaven's own blue in her eyes,
She gambols on the lawn.

She checks the light, elastic tread,
And, shy as bees, her footsteps fled.
The lark's song is no closer.
Sweet shade! in your leafy bands
We pray, God bless her as she stands,
And bless her mother, too.

Yea, bless the three, dear God, since we Have given the life back to Thee!
The mother's life and child's are twain;
Yea, bless her deeply, deeply now
For her dear sake, whose angel brow
Reflects Thine awful smile.

How often in her childish face
Of danger, longing eyes can trace
The looks of one away.
How often in her merry laugh
A voice, more sad than mean,
Of sounds wished for ago!

God bless the child to blossom her e,
Your singing human sunshine to cheer,
Till life has reached its close;
To grow in sweetness and renewed bloom,
To beautify the dear old home,
That pines into darkness now!

A LITTLE BROWN DOG.

He was a poor little fellow, ugraudboy in the large grocery of Rice, Cloves & Co. (I don't mean the brown dog, but Harry Blackburn), and he earned $1.25 a week.

Sixty cents of this went for car fare in Reel to far from the store that he was obliged to ride to and from it—and the rest to his mother, who, with that and the eight dollars a week she received from the cloak factory where she worked, supported herself, her children—Harry, twelve years of age, Eddie, seven, and Jennie, two, and Mr. Jacklow.

Mr. Jacklow was her husband; and the less said about him, the better. Harry always said that he could sit in a rocking-chair and smoke and think longer than any man I ever knew.

But beside this two dollars a week, Harry, who was a bright-eyed, willing, whistling young chap, sometimes got a dime, from his employers' customers when, the grocers' wagons being overloaded or the customers in a great hurry, he carried home their purchases for them. And it was this money he had been saving ever since the 1st of January, for the purpose of having a good time on the next holiday.

On Christmas-day they had a real nice time at his house. His "boss" had given him a holiday and the superintendent of the place where his mother worked had given her one, and somebody (they never found out who) had sent them a large turkey, and the dress-maker down stairs had put a box of tools in Eddie's stocking—dear me! and never did anything wrong in all his life 'cept once, when he stole a piece of boiled corn beef somebody 'd set out in the back area to cool, and he wouldn't have done that, but he knew how hungry granny and me was;" and the tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Oh! I'm so sorry! Don't cry," said Harry. "Here, take my handkerchief and wipe your eyes."

"They'll kill him," commenced the child again, "if I can't coax them to let him out, and I don't want him to go to Heaven that way. I'd rather we'd both go together and be cooked right on in front, and then mamma'd say, 'Why, here's Prince—Nellie must be coming.'"

"Are you sure he's in there?" asked Harry.

"Oh, yes. He was playing by our door yesterday afternoon, most night, and I was poking chips in the stove to make the kettle boil, and I heard him bark, like he was in some trouble, and I ran out, and two awful men had him in a cart, and Jimmy O'Neil said they was going to take him to the pound. So I run after the cart without putting my hat on, and soon it went so fast I couldn't see it, and then I asked everybody where the pound was. I remembered the name by thinking of a pound of brown sugar; and at last I got here, and it was shut up, and so I staid here allnight, and do you think they'll open it soon?"

"What are you going to do when they do open it?" asked Harry.

"Go in and beg the dog-man to give Prince back. He's such a little dog they won't miss him."

"But he won't give Prince back unless you pay two dollars?" said Harry.

"I haven't any money—not a cent," said the child. "But I've brought these," rising and holding out her apron, which held a tiny china doll, a bonddess cat of the same material, a string of glass beads, two pink motto papers and a round white shell. "These were all give to me Christmas," she said; "and I've kept them good, all 'cept the cat, and her head's in my pocket, and he can stick it on somehow, and the candies all was ready, and been up again, out of the mottoes. I ate one and gave her and Prince, and they carried.

Wouldn't it be fun to look at their faces when they saw the ice-cream, and the sponge-cake, and the molasses candy, and the lemonade, and the apple pie, and the cheese, and the baked potatoes! It would be almost as good as the circus. Harry had been there once, and had never forgotten how delightful it was. And then, after supper was over, and they thought the entertainment at an end, wouldn't it be fun again to see their faces when he invited them down on the front stoop to see the pyrotechnic (look in your dictionaries) display!

So Harry had been saving, and saving, and saving, until he found himself, on the evening of the 3d of July, with one dollar and eighty-two cents in his right hand trousers pocket. Times had been hard, very hard, since the new year began, and people had looked very sharply after their small change, for it is likely he would have had double that amount. "But," he said to himself, "A dollar will get the food, and the rest will buy at least a dozen nice fire-works."

He got home from the store on that evening too late and too tired to go out for the things he wanted, but the next morning he was up before the sun rose and the sun rose pretty early during the summer months and dressed and out in the street as the first sunbeams fell on the dew sparkling and mourning the streets were almost deserted, and no fire-crackers or pistol-shots yet broke the silence. But before he had walked a block some cannons resound in the distance, and a peal of bells nearer by began ringing "Yankee Doodle" very merrily. Whistling and jingling the coins in his pockets in time and time with the music of the bells, and wishing the stores where he meant to buy the materials for his party would open, he sauntered slowly along until he reached the dog pound—a place where all stray dogs are taken in to secure and kept a day or two, so that their owners may, if they choose, seek and reclaim them. If found to be friendless at the end of that time, the poor things are put in a large room together for the purpose, and drowned.

Harry heard the imprisoned dogs barking and yelping; and stopping a moment to listen to them with a pitying face, he went on for the day of the kind hearted boys, he dearly loved animals—he saw, sitting upon the door-step, a very pretty little girl, who wore a faded calico dress and a blue checked gingham apron; the apron she held gathered up in her hand, as though it held something of value, and her head and feet were bare. Her large eyes were of a soft brown, and her hair, of the same color, was combed back from her face in smooth curls. There was a creature, man, woman or child, with the exception of a milkman next block, in sight, and Harry looked at her with surprise. At last he said, with a smile, "I thought I got up early, but you must have got up much earlier than I did."

"I've been here all night," said the child, in a sweet, patient voice.

"Here all night!" repeated Harry, with a long whistle. "Good gracious! what 'd you do that for?"

"Cause I want to go in the very minute the door opens. My Prince!" with a sob—"he is in there."

"Your dog?" asked Harry.

"Yes. He's the dearest little brown dog in the world, and I love him best of everything 'cept granny, and I love him just the same as her when she scolds, and my mamma brought him home one day just before she went to Heaven, and I've had him ever since, and he's the best dog that ever lived, and never did anything wrong in all his life 'cept once, when he stole a piece of boiled corn beef somebody 'd set out in the back area to cool, and he wouldn't have done that 'cept he knew how hungry granny and me was;" and the tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Oh! I'm so sorry! Don't cry," said Harry. "Here, take my handkerchief and wipe your eyes."

"They'll kill him," commenced the child again, "if I can't coax them to let him out, and I don't want him to go to Heaven that way. I'd rather we'd both go together and be cooked right on in front, and then mamma'd say, 'Why, here's Prince—Nellie must be coming.'"

"Are you sure he's in there?" asked Harry.

"Oh, yes. He was playing by our door yesterday afternoon, most night, and I was poking chips in the stove to make the kettle boil, and I heard him bark, like he was in some trouble, and I ran out, and two awful men had him in a cart, and Jimmy O'Neil said they was going to take him to the pound. So I run after the cart without putting my hat on, and soon it went so fast I couldn't see it, and then I asked everybody where the pound was. I remembered the name by thinking of a pound of brown sugar; and at last I got here and it was shut up, and so I staid here allnight, and do you think they'll open it soon?"

"What are you going to do when they do open it?" asked Harry.

"Go in and beg the dog-man to give Prince back. He's such a little dog they won't miss him."

"But he won't give Prince back unless you pay two dollars?" said Harry.

"I haven't any money—not a cent," said the child. "But I've brought these," rising and holding out her apron, which held a tiny china doll, a bonddess cat of the same material, a string of glass beads, two pink motto papers and a round white shell. "These were all give to me Christmas," she said; "and I've kept them good, all 'cept the cat, and her head's in my pocket, and he can stick it on somehow, and the candies all was ready, and been up again, out of the mottoes. I ate one and gave her and Prince, and they carried.

"And that's the end of our Fourth-of-July party, 'said Harry, a short time after, for the Jacklow family, as he finished his breakfast and his story at the same time.

"You're a good boy, and did just right," said all the Jacklow family, with the exception of Mr. Jacklow, who remained mildly that "that dollar and ninety-two cents would have kept him in tobacco a long while."

And baby Jennie came and gave her boy brother a sweet kiss—in fact, a very sweet kiss, for some of the syrup which she had been eating on her bread and butter went with it; and as she toddled away, Harry pulled out his handkerchief to wipe his mouth. It came out with a jerk, and four bright new silver half-dollars came with it, and falling on the floor with a pleasant sound, rolled away toward the corners as fast as they could. But they were pounced upon before they had rolled a foot.

"The tail gentleman!" said Harry by "tupping," or battling. Cryss dislocated his neck and received a blow in the stomach, from which he died. His conqueror was sent to jail for a year.

—At Pittsburgh, Pa., early the other morning, two men, one of whom named Albert Abrosby, a Bohemian, employed in a pork-packing establishment in the city, started to cross the railroad bridge over the Allegheny River. They had proceeded but a short distance when they discovered a locomotive approaching, and, not knowing which track it was on, or owing to the confusion incident to such a discovery, both men became so frightened as to lose their presence of mind. Abrosby, in his endeavors to avoid danger, leaped from the bridge, a distance of thirty feet, falling upon a pile of rocks, dislocating his neck, fracturing his skull, and receiving other injuries, any of which would have produced death. He was dead when picked up. Abrosby's companion was more fortunate, avoiding the stone pile in his leap. He was seriously injured, but will recover.

—Pittsfield, Mass., was a good deal excited yesterday by the report that some boys, the oldest not over eighteen, hung a couple of younger boys to a tree, Monday night, nearly strangling one of them. Two parties, it seems, were playing ball on the Jubilee Hill grounds, and the one drew a deadline, telling the boys of the other party that if they should hang them if they crossed it. Some of them in their play did get over the line, and the larger boys of the first party seized them and carried out their threat by pulling down the limb of a tree, tying one end of a rope thereto and the other around the necks of twelve-year-old Robert Wollison, and then letting the limb fly up. The boy hung thus in the air several minutes, the boy says, and when he was let down was black in the face and could hardly catch his breath. Fred Wardwell, another small boy, was also put through the same treatment. When news of the affair came to the police station two officers were taken and three boys who are believed to have been chiefly guilty.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

He Got Even.

Last evening a tall, raw-boned, hungry-looking man, wearing the garb of a countryman, stepped up to the office of the Grand Hotel and, after a "rasthing" with the register, on which he scrawled "R. Townsend, Newport, Ky.," he accosted Clerk Schuyler, and "reckoned he'd take a bite of supper," throwing down a dollar on the counter. The money was raked in by Schuyler, who said:

"You'll find the dining-room on the first floor. Just go up three flight of steps."

The stranger hesitated. He glanced at the place where the dollar was put; then he looked hard at the clerk, as if waiting for something.

"Right upstairs, sir," said the clerk.

"But ah—well, don't I git any change back?"

"Change?"

"Yes. That's a dollar bill I give you."

"Of course. That's all right. That's the regular charge for a supper."

"A dollar for supper? Well, here goes!"

And then Mr. Townsend broke for that supper-room with a strange light in his eyes and a look of firm determination in his face. Sitting down, he wrapped his cowhide boots around the legs of the table and sailed in. He scooped the grub in with both hands, and kept it up for the half an hour. Those sitting around were soon attracted by the novel sight, and one matter-of-fact guest, thinking the man was eating on a wager, kept tally, and this was what he checked off on a bill of fare: Two cups of coffee, three plates plain bread, two plates fried mush, one plate corn beef, one plate chicken, one plate cold ham, two plates loin of veal, two plates fried beef, three plates broiled ham, four plates fresh fish, three plates fried eggs, two plates fried potatoes, one plate baked potatoes.

The man who "scored" during this epigastric feat then took the record to Schuyler, who, after enjoying a hearty laugh at the exposure of the hotel, figured on it, with restaurant prices as a basis, and found that his Newport friend had got away with just $4.05 worth.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

THE Cabinet at Washington, on the 13th, approved the Universal Postal Treaty recently concluded at Paris.

A BOLD and daring train robbery was perpetrated about half past one o'clock the morning of the 13th, about one mile below Winthrop Junction, opposite Atchison, Kan. Four men boarded the passenger train bound south, at Winthrop Junction, getting on the platform between the baggage-car and the first coach. When the conductor started to go through the train from the baggage-car, the leader of the four men pointed two revolvers toward him and ordered him back into the baggage-car. The robbers then entered the car and ordered the baggageman and a young man with him to hold up their hands, which they did. Frank Baxter, express agent, was sitting in a chair in the lighted end of the car, his bible in his lap and the express safe open beside him, busy with his work, when a revolver was suddenly thrust in his face, and he was ordered to hold up his hands. Part of the gang then deliberately transferred the money in the safe, about $6,000, to a sack they had with them. With their booty in his face they then ordered the conductor to stop the train, and he pulled the bell-rope. As the train slowed up the robbers backed out of the car, still covering the inmates with their pistols, and disappeared in the darkness. The entire work was done in five minutes, and ensured the most perfect secrecy, and the train knew of the robbery until the perpetrators had escaped.

The Modern Little Girl.

SHE begins life by taking airings in a new-fashioned baby-carriage, wrapped up to an eighteen-hand, and propelled on her way by a smart nurse-maid, who takes this opportunity of flirting with questionable admirers, and making appointments for future flirtations.

As the little girl progresses, she cajoles mamma, and the other ladies of her set. She will want to wear a "pull-back" by the time she is four years old, and kid gloves at six, certainly.

Her soft hair will be tortured with "leads" and crimping pins by the time it is grown long enough to wind around anything, and if it escapes the vile processes of the curling iron, we may consider it a lucky circumstance.

The modern little girl wants to be a young lady as soon as possible. She sighs for the time when she can have a reception, and wear a train, and carry a fan, and have hot-house bouquets sent to her by youthful admirers.

She reads novels by gaslight, and hides them under her pillow when older people come in her vicinity. She has her ideal hero six feet tall, with hair and eyes like the raven's wing, and a melancholy face, caused by "carking care," and she has a very good bed to sleep in, for your hero of that description is found prowling around old ruins and other unsavory places, gazing at the moon and bewailing his lonely condition.

The modern little girl wears corsets before she has reached her teens, and is particular about the fit of her boots, and the way her overskirt hangs.

She could not think of helping her mother wash the dishes, or put the rooms to rights, because housework would be handy, and sweeping will bodge dust in the hair.

When she is called upon for any useful service, she is settled, and she must get all those French incidents written before to-morrow morning. But when some young friends come for her to go and play croquet, she wakes to new life, and goes with them, and plays till twelve o'clock at night easily enough, and does not get tired—bless you, no indeed! Playing croquet is such delightful exercise.

She knows all the gossip of the town as well as any of the ladies, and she can talk over the broken matches, and the quiet suits, and the various other scandals with the best of them.

She has a great deal to say about beaus, and speaks of setting her cap for this one, and that one, and designates all the young men over twenty as "cattish old minds," and wonders what they are always poking themselves into society for!

By way of accomplishments she plays on the piano, and every luckless caller at the house where she resides must have his or her ears battered with waltzes and marches, thumped out in time on the piano, and with small regard to anything but time.

The modern little girl ignores all girls younger than herself. They are children, and she will not associate with them. She does not care for introduced to the mysteries of crochet, and knitting some additional startling testimony, and it was this book they were after. Leet was taken to a Police Station and locked up. He swore at everyone, and demeaned all as part of a band of conspirators. He was taken before a Magistrate, on the morning of the 19th, charged with disorderly conduct, and exhibited the same symptoms of insanity that had characterized his conduct the night before. He was finally committed to the charge of the Commissioners of Charity and Correction, with a view to an examination of his mental condition.

IT is authoritatively stated, by the Washington National Republican of the 19th, that voters in the Government Departments in that city will be granted the usual leaves of absence to attend the elections in their several States.

JUDGE MARKS has been nominated for Governor by the Democrats of Tennessee, on a platform which demands the unconditional repeal of the Resumption act; that no more interest-bearing bonds be issued; that the National Banking act be repealed, and greenbacks be substituted for the National Bank circulation; that Treasury notes be made receivable for all Government dues; that all taxes required by the Government be raised by the issuance of non-interest bearing Treasury notes, etc., etc.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Aug 20, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

A spirited way is again in progress over the future of the Big Anat River bridge, which has already swallowed up including interest, over $12,000,000, and which is probably not more than half completed. Being out of money to go ahead with, the Bridge Commissioners have made the usual requisition upon the Comptroller for a fresh million dollars as provided by law for the raising of New York's third of the expense. The Comptroller has flatly refused to comply, on the ground that there has been gross extravagance, mismanagement and fraud in the conduct of the work thus far; that the legal limit of expenditure will be passed long before the structure is finished; that the bridge when built will be a nuisance to shipping, and in any case of no advantage except to Brooklyn. The Corporation Counsel of New York city being applied to for an opinion wrote an elaborate one to the effect that Comptroller Kelly had no option in the matter, but was bound to issue the bonds Still the Comptroller holds out and refuses to "fork over" until a judicial decision shall have been obtained. The newspapers have taken it up, the majority supporting the Comptroller in his action, and thus the matter stands. The force of workmen have been dismissed, and everything is at a deadlock.

There is doubtless a colored gentleman somewhere in this woodpile as witness the growth of the estimates. A prominent merchant who knows the whole story recently expressed himself as follows: "The bridge," he said, "is a more gigantic swindle than the Court House or the Capitol at Albany. It began in the same way, with a demand for a small appropriation, and year after year the grasping Ring have cried for more, more. In 1860 J. A Roebling estimated the cost at $8,000,000; in 1866 he increased his estimate to $4,000,000, in 1867 to $7,000,000; all this for a height of 200 feet. In 1872 his son, Colonel W. A. Roebling, made the estimate $9,500,000, although the proposed height of the bridge had been reduced from 200 to 135 feet. In 1873 the estimate was $13,145,067, and I believe it will go on increasing until it reaches $25,000,000. There seems to be no limit to the grasping capacity of the Bridge Ring, and unless the financial officers of New York shut down on them they will continue to demand money, until they have saddled the city with an enormous debt in addition to her already too great responsibilities."

More than this it is said to be a serious question whether the bridge with its enormous weight would be safe after it was done. So we are in a rather unenviable quandary. If the bridge goes on to completion we have got to stand a drain of money for years with the possibility of having after all only an unsafe practically useless structure to show for it. If the work is abandoned the two cities of New York and Brooklyn not only are out of pocket many millions of dollars but have exposed themselves to the ridicule of the world for having reared two such costly monuments of reckless jobbery as the piers of the Brooklyn Bridge would then have proved to be.

As the dispatches come hurrying in from the plague-stricken South, each bearing more dismal tidings than its predecessor, some uneasiness has been felt for the safety of New York, from which town it is, of course, impossible to entirely exclude fugitives from the yellow fever districts. One or two alleged cases of the disease have indeed been discovered here, but so great vigilance is exercised at quarantine and throughout the Health Department that I presume we really have little foundation for our fears. The appeals for help, which New York is always the first city to receive in cases of local distress any where in the country, have begun to pour in, and as usual, are promptly responded to. Several thousands of dollars have already been contributed and forwarded, and more is being done in the same direction. The violence and rapid spread of the scourge has had a serious effect on our Southern trade for this season amounting in some lines to its almost complete ruin.

Among the measures introduced to check the spread of the disease is the move one of disinfecting the mails before forwarding from the yellow fever towns.

The most salient feature, thus far, of the session of the Butler-Potter Investigating Committee in New York, has been the extraordinary testimony of the New Orleans witness, Leet. During the days of his examination much interest was displayed in the proceedings owing to the witness' strong manner and startling statements. It now seems that Leet was at least partially insane while he was giving this testimony. After being released from attendance on the committee he went to the Astor House where after displaying his mental aberration by confiding to the hotel people the fact that he was constantly pursued by kidnappers and assassins, he locked himself in his room and fired several shots through the door at the clerk and a policeman who endeavored to gain entrance. He was quickly secured, however, and is now in the Bloomingdale Insane Asylum.

Three funerals have taken place this week in which the seats of chief and lesser mourners were filled by members of the dramatic profession. Old William Niblo, who as restaurateur and theatrical manager was dear to the last generation of New Yorkers, died at the age of almost ninety years, wealthy and highly respected by the few who knew him. So retired had been his life for many years past that but a very small number of us suspected that the founder of Niblo's Garden, the palmiest days of which were before our advent into the world, still dwelt among us. Mr. Niblo became a great amateur of paintings after his retirement from dramatic business and, I believe, leaves a fine collection behind him.

The second of the obsequies referred to were those of George Vining Bowers, the comedian, who will, perhaps, be longest remembered by his fine personation of Jim Trenchard to Southern's Lord Dundreary. The third, and saddest of all, was the funeral of Harry Montague the handsome, popular and talented, the news of whose sudden death in San Francisco caused deep sorrow wherever he was known. The ceremonies took place in the "little church around the corner," and were conducted, as has become the custom on such occasions, by Dr. Houghton who in the future will surely be awarded a niche among the patron saints of actors. Mr Montague had been a regular attendant at this church and a personal friend of its pastor, whose eulogy of the dead actor was warm and sincere. A thousand mourners were present at the services. An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you,—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, belching, restlessness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. THE POTTER INVESTIGATION.

THE Potter Investigating Committee resumed its sessions in New York on the 12th, but in the absence of several members no witnesses were examined.

Gen. Butler asked that Stanley Matthews be summoned. Mr. Potter said he had been summoned a few days before, and had replied that he believed Nicholls and Tilden carried Louisiana. Witness spoke of the visit of Governor Hayes, in 1866 or 1868, to investigate the cause of the riots. He was a good shot and a good talker, and made friends for his party. Witness also knew Mr. Foster, of Ohio, and believed him truthful and candid to talk as he felt. Mr. Roberts said he was selected by Governor Hayes to ascertain the views of four Hayes, and what the President would adopt in case of his election as to the Presidency. He was also giving the result of his conversation with Mr. Hayes. Witness then read a sealed letter to Hayes, whom Mr. Hiscock, of the Committee, objected to questions and argument leading to questions upon the President. An excited discussion followed, during which Butler and Mr. Hiscock were then Chairman overruled the objection and the witness continued, at length, his interview with Hayes and his subsequent interviews with Hayes and Governor Hudson told him that Hayes was a good fellow and would do what was right by Louisiana, to which Wilmes replied that he had heard this from the South on purpose to find that out. Hudson then gave him the sealed letter of introduction to Hayes. He did not know the contents of that letter. Mr. Roberts said in interview with Gov. Hayes was of an exceedingly pleasant character, and he learned that the Governor entertained the most friendly feeling toward the South. The witness told him that the State must be saved, at all hazards, to the Democrats, and that whatever he threw over would in that respect be of the least value to them. He stated to Governor that they could not establish or show a majority of 13,000, Gov. Hayes said the witness that he had no desire for the Presidency, unless he were counseled to fairly. He spoke very kindly and confidently of the South. The witness detailed at length conversation he had at various times, before the matter was definitely settled, with Mr. Lamar and others. The witness said, from conversations with various Republican leaders, he understood that if Louisiana and South Carolina were counted for Hayes the Government of those States would be given to the Democrats. They proceeded on this assumption and the assurances were carried out. Gen. Butler observed that such assurances seemed to lead much the same nature as a bargain. In the absence of further evidence he (Butler) said he was offered the position of Naval Officer, but recommended that it be given to a "nigger." He would not take any position where he would be obliged to take care of Kemper, of the Returning Board. Gen. Grant's order, known as the Sheridan order, was passed a short time before he went out of office at the urgent solicitation of the Republicans. When he left New Orleans to call on Gov. Hayes he believed the Returning Board would declare Packard elected. In that conversation Hayes said to him he did not want the Presidential office except to get it fairly. Gen. Comly was present at the time. Hayes said if he failed to succeed he was not a mere empty form of words, but he intended to live up to it in its broadest significance, and intended to treat the people of the South with fairness and justice. He said nothing as to the State Government he would recognize in Louisiana. In answer to Merriman and Justice to make the withdrawal of the troops one condition of the person receiving the higher office and vote. He believed Hayes to be a well-meaning honest man. Gen. Butler then cross-examined the witness as to whether he did not understand Hayes' views and intentions to mean the recognition of the Democratic Government. He replied that Hayes' views were of that kind, and the witness was left to infer what these words meant. Gen. Butler asked the witness what they implied. Witness admitted that when he left Hayes he had not the slightest doubt that when he announced the information with the statement that he was the President-elect Hayes would be his friend. Witness told him that the State must be saved, at all hazards, to the Democrats, and that whatever he threw over would in that respect be of the least value to them. He stated to Governor that they could not establish or show a majority of 13,000.

DOMESTIC.

A TERRIBLE nitro-glycerine explosion occurred at Negaunee, Mich., on the 21st, resulting in the instant death of four men who were in the employ of the Miners' Powder Company, at whose works they were at the time of the accident, engaged in the manufacture of glycerine. The bodies of two of the victims were mutilated past recognition, and the debris of the company's works were scattered over a large area.

A SPECIAL telegram from Washington, on the 21st, to the Chicago Tribune says the President had settled upon a policy as regards the Rio Grande border difficulties with Mexico, to the following effect: Raiders are to be pursued with increased vigor when they retreat to Mexican soil, and punished when caught, and the troops engaged in such pursuits will be increased four time to three. While not seeking a conflict with the Mexican regular forces, the commanding officer of the pursuing parties will not avoid one if such forces interfere. Within on Mexican soil the pursuing forces will strictly confine themselves to the ranche, or cabin, of the cattle thief, and take the utmost care to give no offence or cause of complaint to the Mexican authorities. No offense is meant to the Mexican Government, the design of the United States being simply to punish depredations upon the Indian property and lives of its citizens. Nothing which may occur on the south side of the Rio Grande as a result of the execution of this policy will be accepted by the Administration as an immediate cause of war between the two countries, but if the Mexican regular troops shall cross the river in retaliation for these measures a casus belli may be construed therefrom.

THERE were 11,472,500 of the new standard silver dollars coined up to the 10th of August. Of these 1,380,000 had been placed in circulation, leaving 10,090,500 on hand in the Government Treasury. A Washington telegram of the 22d says the demand for these dollars was slowly but steadily increasing.

Liberal contributions were being made for the relief of sufferers.

THERE were two cases of yellow fever discovered in Philadelphia, on the night of the 24th. A man died at the New York City quarantine hospital, on the 25th, of yellow fever, contracted while unloading a cargo of logwood.

AT Memphis, on the 25th, the yellow-fever record showed a decrease in the number of new cases, as compared with the day before, there being sixty-one reported up to 6 P. M. The deaths, however, were the largest of any day since the fever made its appearance there, twenty-six. Interments being reported for the same time. There was a great scarcity of nurses, and more had been telegraphed for. The new cases in New Orleans numbered 98; deaths, thirty-three. Vicksburg was cut off from all communication with other points, except by the Mississippi river. The fever continues to spread, there being over fifty new cases and twenty-two deaths reported during the preceding twenty-four hours. Dr. Yelverton telegraphed from Grenada to the Howard Association at New Orleans, for more nurses, or others to help the sick on board their vessels. Provisions and nourishment for the sick were short. Several prominent men were down with the fever, and the nurses were all getting the disease, four of the latter were then dying for the lack of nourishment and domestic attention. All was reported in all the affected sections of the South, and the calls for assistance were being generally responded to from Northern and Western cities and towns. A Memphis dispatch of the 26th says fourteen were known in that city of parents deserting their children and children their parents. The wife and three children of a prominent citizen were taken with the fever during his absence from the city. He was telegraphed for by the family, and replied, "Take care of my family." His wife died and the children were conveyed to the City Hospital, where one of them died on the 26th. There were 100 new cases and twenty-six interments in Memphis on the 26th. Several negroes were among the victims. The new cases in Vicksburg numbered 140; interments, twenty-five. A telegram was received at New Orleans from Grenada, dated at noon, on the 26th, saying: "For Heaven's sake, send a few nurses! It is untrue that the material for the disease is exhaustive; the nurses are exhausted. Two of the most eminent physicians have just been taken down. Physicians are needed with nurses, but not without." Another dispatch said Dr. Yelvey was sick. A physician and four nurses were sent in response to this appeal. The new cases in New Orleans, on the 26th, numbered 125; deaths, forty-four. A man died in Cairo, on the 28th, of, it is supposed, yellow fever. He was from Memphis. A somewhat similar case occurred in Pittsburgh, the victim dying, on the 26th. The health report from the Surgeon-General's Office, in Washington, on the 25th, gives the total of cases in New Orleans, so far, at 1,073; deaths, 534. Vicksburg, 400 cases and sixty-nine deaths. Memphis, 144 cases and fifty-three deaths during preceding six days. Canton, Miss., eighteen cases and eight deaths. Fort Gibson, Miss., thirteen cases and nine deaths. In Grenada, so many of the remaining population were stricken with the disease that definite information as to the number of cases and deaths could not be obtained.

The witness could not give the vote for Nicholls exactly, but he had a majority of 2,041 votes. The Returning Board threw out some 13,000 votes to make up the Hayes Election. "In the campaign of 1874," said the witness, "we were cheated out of the election by the same Returning Board of 1876. There was no chance in the latter election or anything. They were as arbitrary and unjust in 1876 as in 1874. The appointees were increased by bolgerman passing from leading Republicans all over the country. Some boasters in Louisiana, and showed us that they would sustain their men in any action that they took. The Louisiana men got desperate after the election, and about give it up, but when these telegrams commenced and the visiting statesmen arrived, their spirits renewed, and they never seemed to falter from that out. The inauguration of Gov. Nicholls took place before some 10,000 persons. They beside and Assembly were at once organized. They took possession of everything except some small rooms filled and occupied by Packard's friends. On the 4th of January Nicholls sent to secure co-operation by the Federal troops. He did not get an order to that effect, from them, Grant, on the 24th of March. He said he was told that the physicians to have the patient transferred to the Bloomingdale Asylum, as he was laboring under acute mania. He was still boisterous and irrepressible in conversation, and violent in demonstrations.

DENNIS KEARNEY, the self-constituted champion of labor in California, spoke in Chicago, on the evening of the 20th, to the workingmen of the city. He gave a history of his exploits in behalf of the interests of labor in his own State, and predicted that the organization of workingmen would carry the next election in Massachusetts. He offered resolutions, which were adopted, indorsing the California war-cry that "the Chinese must go."

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Sept 6, 1876

Editor of SENTINEL:

The ravages of the yellow fever continue to form one of the main subjects of thought and action in New York. Instead of decreasing, the two or three colman reports which the daily papers give of the progress of the disease show it to be rather gaining ground than otherwise. The sympathies of thisvcity are fully aroused as may be inferred from the frequency of meetings and entertainments in behalf of the sufferers and the freedom with which money and goods are offered in the cause. Over $60,000 has been contributed, and the results of a system just put in operation will doubtless be to largely swell this amount. This system is the novel and sensible one of placing ballot boxes in numerous public places for the reception of such cash as citizens feel impelled to donate. The idea is a happy one. People can vote early and often and that without registration or naturalization. The paper rage "repeating" has obtained sterling as among the most sacred items of the community. No vote is challenged on account of age, color or previous condition of servitude, and not even the woman suffragists can complain of any tyrannous restriction of their rights. The result of this plan is not known as yet, but the idea seems to have struck the popular fancy, and will probably do good work.

Among the entertainments to behalf of the fever sufferers was one at Manhattan Beach, a portion of old Coney Island has been redistributed, and this reminds me to say that, of all the transformation scenes ever presented to wondering and delighted eyes, that which has occurred within one year on the sandy barren of Coney Island is a little the most marvellous. For many years this strip of sand has been a good deal frequented in the summer season on account of its nearness to New York and Brooklyn, but up to last season its patrons were mostly of the order which takes kindly to beer and pugilism, and of that other class who, open eyed and open mouthed, fall easy victims to the wiles of the thimble rigger and three card monte man. But suddenly—unnoticed to us who have meanwhile been busy about other matters it seems to have been in the twinkling of an eye—the spot has been so changed that even its own father—the Atlantic Ocean—can hardly recognize it. Two enormous, and sumptuous hotels have sprung like Aladdin's palace from the earth, together with a mass of pavilions, bathing houses pagodas around all of which by a lavish expenditure of money the wilderness has been made to blossom like the rose. A net work of narrow gauge railroads has been laid to connect New York and Brooklyn with the new watering place, the suddenness and immensity of whose popularity are proportionate to the miraculous quickness of its growth. It far outstrips Long Branch and Cape May both in elegance and in the multitude of its patrons. The passenger traffic between it and the city is something wonderful. On some evenings there have been as many as 100,000 people in the hotels and along the beach, while in gayety and dazzling brilliancy the scene is only comparable to such European watering places as Baden-Baden on Wisbaden which have however lack the invigorating sight and sound of the ocean.

Powerful electric lights illuminate the beach and grounds at night and throw a weirdly beautiful radiance over the white capped surf and the bathers disporting themselves therein, while sounds of music from the pagodas conducive to the general enjoyment. One of these bands is Jules Levy, the great cornetist, and its pagoda is the nucleus of a crowd reaching usually well up into the thousands. Occasionally, as was the case one evening this week, the beach for nearly a mile is made to blaze with fireworks of a quality and in a profusion heretofore known only to the gay capitals of Europe. The reason is now drawing fast to its close, but as yet there is little falling off observable either in the crowds or the attractions of the place.

The past week was the last in the eventful life of our National Bankrupt Law, and has probably been the liveliest one of its existence. The unfortunate merchant, the tricky speculator, the hapless real estate owner whose hard earn fortune in "equities" has failed into thin air and the brazen rascal who habitually takes advantage of the act to cheat his creditors about every other year and who has been the main cause of its repeal—all these representative applicants for relief have thronged the halls of justice and jostled each other in their eagerness to secure eleventh hour salvation. Henceforth insolvent debtors will have to stand or fall by their record, and the shameless impositions which the dead act has rendered possible will be so no longer. Now that this repeal is going to put a stop to defrauding creditors. There is so much luck as that for the commercial world this side of the millennium, but at least the tactics of the wicked will have to be changed somewhat, and the way of the transgressor be made more healthfully difficult.

In a few weeks New York has got to submit to a great and humiliating loss. Theodore Thomas, who for fifteen years has worked in the city, and whose orchestra and concerts have been the chief pride of the town, musically speaking, for a not much shorter period, has become weary of the persistent failure of the metropolis to afford him proper support, his arduous and useful labors and has signed a contract with certain gentlemen of Cincinnati, by virtue of which he will soon disband my present parable orchestra, shake off from his feet the dust of Gotham and take up his abode in the former city, where a lucrative and honorable position awaits him as director of a new and complete Conservatory of music on the model of the best schools of Europe. New York ought to be ashamed of herself, and to do her justice, no doubt is. But it is too late for repentance. Thomas is as good as gone, and I fear it will be long before we shall look upon his like again.

The Essex Market Police Court of this town has a curiously complicated case of larceny on its hands. The prisoner is a young woman occupied as attendant at a bath establishment. A lady came to the place for a bath, before entering which she gave a little bag of valuables containing among other things a $400 ring, into the custody of the present prisoner. When the lady reclaimed her little bag she found her sparkling jewel not at. Although search of the bath and premises was made with assistance of the attendant, but no ring was found whereupon the victim accused the girl of stealing it, and had her arrested. The latter pleaded innocence and persisted therein till the next day, when she complained of feeling sick, and confessed to her startled keepers that she had swallowed the missing ornament. A physician was called and every effort made to recover the property, but up to date the ring has not been brought to light. Further developments are anxiously awaited by all parties concerned.

Yellow Fever—How the Disease Advances.

From a paper prepared by Dr. Henry Smith, of the United States Marine-Hospital Service, the following conclusions are taken as to yellow fever. Dr. Smith was in charge of the yellow-fever patients at Savannah and Brunswick, Ga., during the epidemic in 1876:

Although the unfelt element in yellow fever has not as yet been determined by our outward senses, observation points to the belief that it exists in living germs, propagated without the body, but which can be studied only by their effects on the human organism. In illustration of this position, the following facts may be cited:

1. The disease is certainly transportable, through fomites, from an infected to a healthy and distant locality.

2. Individuals, alone and apart from fomites, fail to spread the disease in a healthy locality.

3. The disease is known to extend gradually from existing foci of infection, like the annyworm on cotton-plantations.

4. Testimony has been, for years accumulating, to the conclusion that the disease may be arrested and extinguished, in infected localities, by the use of agents destructive to the low forms of life.

It may be here observed that on the last point proof has been amply made through the system of disinfection, as practiced for past years by the Board of Health of Louisiana.

The following are valuable, and probably represent the very latest theories regarding the action and propagation, under certain favoring conditions, of this most formidable of diseases:

1. That the poison is not of a gaseous nature, but attaches itself to the soil, to walls and the exposed surfaces generally.

2. That the disease propagates from centers along surfaces equally in all directions, and often against currents of air as with them.

3. That the poison of chills in the patient some time before development.

4. That the germs, whether animal or vegetable, multiply, which, in new or host-fields, for an indefinite period preceding the moment at which the development of the disease takes place.

It has been also ascertained that yellow fever advances from local force at the rate of about forty feet per day. As the disease, therefore, has a constant tendency to spread, the whole space over which it could have extended must be disinfected in order to check its advance from the point at which it had its origin. To determine the area over which disinfectants should be used, it is only necessary to add four to the number of days since the disease manifested itself, and multiply by forty—the rate per day at which the disease progresses from a given center.

The disease was ushered in sometimes with, and at other times without, premonitory symptoms. Usually there was experienced a feeling of malaise preceding the onset of the disease, and in most of the cases a chilly sensation, rarely with a violent shaking chill; great depression and lassitude; pain in the back and head, generally intense, sometimes in the limbs, or other or all at the same time, occasionally accompanied by spasms in the lower extremities—similar in these to Asiatic cholera, with nausea or a tendency to vomit; while slight or entire absence of pain or chill characterized many of the milder attacks. This chilly feeling soon merged into the fever, much higher than with ordinary fevers, often of a violent and malignant character from the slightest invasion. Many cases, and particularly the relapsed, required twenty, thirty and even fifty days; in one instance, the longest that I had seen during the epidemic, one of the first seen on my arrival, and convalescence fully established at the date of my departure, occupied a period of upward of six weeks.

The skin was hot and dry. The temperature of the body was higher than in any ordinary fevers. The pulse full and strong, ranging from 100 to 130 and upward. The tongue coated, sometimes thin, but more generally pasty, flabby appearance. With a sick, low tongue was often seen without dirty and pointed, occasionally parched, accompanied with dryness of the mouth and fauces, and great thirst, with a few, seeming calls for large draughts of cold water.

The average duration of the febrile paroxysm or active stage was sixty-two hours or about two days and a half, the shortest twelve, and the longest 100 hours. This state was usually preceded by a corresponding depression of all the mental powers, passing into the calm, stupor, and constituting the stage of depression. The pulse has been known often to fall in the manner of beats from 130 or 140 to 80, 70 or 50 and even to 40 beats in the minute in an almost incredible short space of time—the temperature not again becoming natural with same, and in others still keeping up, bearing no relation to the lowered state of the pulse.

In the grave or severer cases the face presented a suffused or deeply congested aspect, with the eyes highly injected. Extreme restlessness or great alarm was often present; the patient fell unconscious, struggling to get out of bed, culminating occasionally in furious delirium, but generally a sullen character, while profound stupor often marked the last stages. In a few death-scenes that I witnessed not a ray of thought was manifest; in others the intellect was retained to the last.

The perspirations were variable—sometimes only partial, at others irregular, occasionally offensive. The most spontaneous of the skin was often watching, but unusual in some, and afterward yellow; the latter invariably rare. In many of the fatal cases, simultaneously with yellow eyes and skin, and deeply vomit, the skin was often covered with livedo or black blotches, increasing in largeness dark patches after death, occasionally in the days before the fatal termination. During convalescence, abscesses and eruptions on the face sometimes succeeded, but were not so frequent as I had witnessed in previous epidemics. Desquamation of the cuticle was quite common, especially on the hands, face and feet. While a correct diagnosis was occasionally difficult, the tongue, mouth and gums usually presented all the characteristics of the disease. Black vomit was frequent, and it was a noticeable fact that numerous cases recovered from it in a large proportion of cases the poison determined to the kidneys early in the disease, frequently giving rise to suppressions of the urinary secretion, and death followed on the third or fourth day, proving more fatal even than black vomit. Generally the urine was on the first day free and of a red color, later in the disease having a turbid appearance and still later—on the fourth or fifth day—dark-reddish and somewhat muddy. In severer cases albumen was present after the second or third day, and, in the still severer or fatal cases, in an almost coagulating large.

Bijah's Advice.

A little woman, with a tear trembling on the end of her nose, entered the parlor, sank into the red rocking-chair and tremblingly asked:

"Mr. Joy, can I trust you?"

"Madam, you can!" he promptly replied, "I don't like to hear a man praising himself, but I believe I can go to any grocery in Detroit and get trusted for one dozen clothes-pins without having to leave any security whatever. I pass have in my possession thirty-five cents which were handed to me by a stage-driver to buy him some tinted note-paper, and if I embezzle one cent of it I hope to be bald-headed all my days! Yes, madam you can trust me."

"—I was married about three years ago," began the woman, after considerable hesitation.

"Don't doubt it in the least, madam, and I suppose it was a case of love?"

"It seemed so. My husband seemed to think everything of me, and I know I almost worshiped him. We were very, very happy until a year ago."

"Yes, I suppose so, madam. As Milton says:

"He called me his birdie—his angel—
I thought him the dearest on earth
And we'll dance all night 'till broad daylight,
And—and—and so forth."

"A few months ago," she softly continued, "he began finding fault because I did not use more big words in talking, and he said that my grammar was perfectly awful. Not a day passed that he does not upbraid me and sometimes I even wish I were dead!"

"Madam, does he find any fault with your cooking?"

"No, not muy."

"And in making the bed you don't get the foot the highest?"

"Oh, no."

"And he never finds buttons off his shirts—never comes home to meals and finds the stove cold, and you gossiping over the gate?"

"Why! has to wait one minute for any of his meals, sir."

"Your husband had no fault to find for a year or two—didn't seem to notice your lack of big words while the honey-moon lasted?"

"No."

"Very well, madam, your husband's coat is too big to fit him in the back, but I think we can put another on him. Now, then, will you do as I tell you to?"

"Oh, sir, I couldn't possibly—him—could do such a thing!" she exclaimed.

"Pooh, madam! Do I resemble a fiend? Do I seem like a murderer? I don't want you to kill him, but I want to help you win back his love and get his nose down where it used to be. What time do you have supper?"

"At six, sir."

"Well, you go home from here and upset two or three chairs in the sitting-room, toss the broom out doors, scatter the contents of the work-basket around the house and make things look as if there had been a tramp meeting held there, put in just half enough tea, burn your biscuit, and for sauce cut up the hardest peaches you can find in the market. As he comes home, have an old dress on and your hair down, and the minute he enters the house you must remark that 'the loveliness of the evening seems to percolate the entire catastrophe of the hygienic influence.' Big words, you see—grammar till his brain stands up! If he finds fault with the supper, tell him that the encumbrance appears to elucidate the tarantula, and if that doesn't fetch him you can continue to affiliate with the pathetic enigma. Give him big words and biscuits—XNX grammar and sloppy tea, and I'll bet five hundred hog-puddings again a penny whistle that he'll get up from that table with his nose as low down as the mercury in January."

"Mr. Joy, I'll try it!" she exclaimed, as she rose up.

"Never mind crown to fall—money refunded if it doesn't work," he replied.

Her eyes sparkled, a thush came to her cheeks, and she went out saying:

"The etymology of the diaphragon discovers a conclusive antiquarian tendency to disruption."

Bijah leaned back, rubbed the down off a Crawford peach, and growled:

"Yes, that's so, and if she only follows my advice that husband will dream to-night that he's a grammar, and that four dictionaries are running him across lots into the river. I've been right that!"—Detroit Free Press.

Why Time Seems Long or Short.

We do not believe, indeed, that the self-consciousness or otherwise of our states of mind has much to do with the matter. The real condition on which the rapidity or slowness of time, as it passes, depends, is much rather the point on which the desire of the moment is fixed. Take two very common cases. You are driving to meet some one arriving by train, quite sure of being in time, or even far too early, and eager are you for the moment when you will meet the person coming by the train. The drive itself may seem interminable, as well as the time which has to elapse after you reach, before the train comes, for you are not interested in the objects you pass, but only eager for the expiration of the time between the moment you have reached and the moment you wish to reach. Here, time is your enemy, as it were. You want to kill the time, and the time seems unendurably long. But take another case. You are driving to a train which you have little or no hope of catching, but the most eager desire to catch—driving against time. Here the point desired is to reach the train before the minute comes at which, as you know, it is advertised to start. The consequence is that what you desire is not the annihilation of any interval of time, but lengthening wherever more events than in ordinary cases it will cover. As you hold your watch in your hands, the objects on the road seem to pass with intolerable slowness, and at the same time the hand of your watch seems to move with intolerable rapidity. You thank the hand never moved so fast before, while you probably objurgate the coachman for his cautious and slow driving. Here, the more events you can crowd into a given time the better you are pleased. What you desire is to crowd in more, and the consequence is that time appears to fly too fast for your wishes. Now, we cannot see that there is more of self-consciousness in one state than the other. In both alike the desire is fixed on a future event. In the first case the intermediate events are of a nature which you have no occasion to watch, which happen in their prescribed order without your noticing them, and the consequence is that time stretches itself as a tedious gulf between you and the desired moment; in the second case, the intermediate events are all events which, as you well know, must not only happen in their given order, but happen at a very much more rapid rate than usual, if your desire is to be satisfied; the consequence is that the thing on which your desire fixes itself is the rate at which they happen, and, naturally enough, time appears to be your enemy, not because it is so long, but because it flies so quickly, and does not give them, as it seems, a fair chance of happening. And so, in the one case, you accuse it of going slowly, in the other of flying fast.

And we believe that this is, in fact, the reason why childhood seems to pass so slowly, compared with youth and manhood—at all events, to all those children who have a strong sense of something in them which none of the guarded and dependent life of childhood satisfies. The growth of still immature faculties, the enormous disproportion between wishes and power, the comparison between the easy way in which grown-up people dispose of your limbs and your own secret wishes in relation to it, make it seem that almost everything worth living for—at least so to an ambitious child, and most children are more or less ambitious—is in the unattainable future, when you are to dispose of your own destiny. Your desire is fixed on something, the only condition of which appears to be the passage of a dreary gulf of time. It is like waiting at a railway-station till the train by which you are to go departs. In youth and manhood, on the contrary, you are concerned with the present. Often you rather reproach time with being too short for that which you wish to crowd into it. Compara tively seldom, indeed, is a man in a time of mere waiting for the future, as childhood so often is with children, whose practical powers are—or rather are to be—much larger than their stores of thought, but whose powers are as yet undeveloped, and money wanting to ripen. Assuredly Campbell's solution of the problem he himself set is not the true one. This was his explanation:

"Hours gravely pass in childhood's sleep,
Unknowing of its flow;
And those of youth a moment seem,
Too rapid to go slow."

The sweetness has little to do with it. The longest hours of childhood are usually the dreariest and the most wretched years—the years least adequately filled, not those most adequately filled. The seeming length of time depends on the point of time on which the heart is fixed. If that point be at a distance, and the mind is little concerned with what is actually happening except to wish it over, the time seems long. If that point is near for what you know must happen, in case you wish it to be gratified in the interval, the time seems short. And that is, we believe, the true explanation of many of the manifold experiences of the varying length of time which every man, by a little questioning of his memory, can summon up.—London Spectator.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—"Hold the Fort" is Mrs. Hayes' favorite musical selection, and at a reception given in her honor in Newport, last Friday night, the band played it at her request.

—The Rev. Robert Ashton, the editor of the "Congregational Year Book" of England, is dead. He was born in 1812, just died in England in the eighty-first year of his age.

—Templeton, the Boston correspondent of the Hartford Courant, draws this pen picture of Kearney: "Kearney is not a bad-looking person. He is a type of a class that may be seen in any large city. He has a nervous, restless manner, but not at all extraordinarily so; is fluent in speech; has a good flow of words, and is not unlikely, himself, thinks he has a mission to reform politics and redress the grievances of the laboring classes."

—The late Mr. Reese, the California millionaire, was never known to keep a horse or carriage unless he could get it evidently in trade. He would wait ten minutes at a street corner before getting into a car in the hope of meeting an acquaintance who would pay his fare. When taunted by a friend one day in regard to his miserly habits he said: "Well, I can't help it; I know it's foolish, but I do enjoy it when I get in all matters not connected with money he was a man of great intelligence and liberality.

—Mrs. Oliver, whose suit against Ex-Senator Cameron for breach of promise is still before the court, has sent the following strange letter to the District Commissioners of Washington:

"To the Commissioners: Since I saw you on Saturday I am without help in my complaint before you and ask your protection. Senator Cameron has threatened to have me arrested on Congress I obtained a position in the Treasury Department, but was discharged. As I am the lady who brought suit against Hon. Simon Cameron for breach of promise, and he intercepted and had me seized, should anything more occur to injure me, Mr. Cameron, himself or his son will be responsible. Mrs. Oliver."

—Miss McClock says the young wife who is economical is a heroine.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A Williamantic (Conn.) girl, employed in a thread factory, wrote her name and the words, "Wanted, a husband," on a spool recently, and when it had been wound with thread it was sent to a South Norwalk shoe factory, where it fell into a Ridgefield man's hands. He began a correspondence; the girl replied that she was engaged, but would find him another as good as she, and a marriage has just taken place as a result of the spool's message.

—As Jacob Landis, of Erwin, N. Y., was twisting a wisp around a sheaf of wheat, the other day, a large rattlesnake sprang from the straw, directly toward his face. The farmer mechanically threw his hand out and caught the snake around the neck, just in time to prevent its fastening its fangs in his nose. He held the snake firmly in his hand and called for aid. A companion ran up and cut the serpent's head off with his scythe. The rattlesnake's tail wound itself so tightly about Landis' bare arm that a broad red mark on the flesh showed every coil. The snake was three and a half feet long and had nine rattles.

—A Norwich man saw, the other evening, a swallow whose actions reminded him of a cat's playful antics with a mouse. The bird was in pursuit of a gaudily-colored butterfly, and as it chased the tiny insect over the house-top and through the tree-boughs, the observer could but perceive that the butterfly was caught by the bird it was chased from its mouth, and the chase, with its features of hot pursuit, capture and escape, was repeated a score or more of times. At length the bird, tired of its sport, descended on the insect with a sweep, caught it in its beak and quickly devoured it.—New Haven Palladium.

—A strange accident occurred to-day on the Springfield, Jackson & Pomeroy Narrow-Gauge near Bainbridge. The train which arrives at Bainbridge at 2 o'clock and thirty minutes was in order. To-day the engine was left standing on the track as usual while the engineer and fireman went to a house about 100 yards distant to get their meal. They had been gone but a short time when a man named A. Pepper pulled out, connecting the engine with the train, climbed into the cab, and pulled the throttle wide open. The engine shot down the track like an arrow until it reached a curve about a mile distant, when it jumped the track, rolled over on its side, and became a complete wreck. Pepper was instantly killed. What his motive was for so strange a deed is a mystery. He had at one time been a bank-bursar, but had squandered his means by dissipation. Some of the citizens think the longest spell of confinement at last driving suicide; others, that it was a half-crazy, half-drunken freak.—Cincinnati Dispatch.

Cases of Drowning—Suggestions.

It may have struck the readers of the Sun that its reports of deaths from drowning have been unusually numerous this season. Many of these might have also been very sad ones, so little would have saved the victims. No one who has not been a witness can have been the case of the wing, the wing itself, and with it the bird, slides forward and downward, and of course it will do this so long as the statement that a bird flies by its own weight is strictly true.

This is true, also, of insects and bats. They all have wings with stiff front edges, and flexible hind edges which bend and allow the air to pass out, so that flying is nothing but sliding down a hill made of air. A fly rises by flapping its wings, and it flies by falling back toward the earth and sliding forward at the same time. At the end of each stroke of its wings it has raised itself enough to make up for the distance it has fallen since the last stroke, and accordingly it stays at the same height and moves forward in a seemingly straight line. But if you watch it closely you will see that the whole wings slowly, such as the woodpecker, you can see them rise and fall, and will have a trouble in seeing that their path is not really a straight line, but is made up of curves; although most birds flap their wings so rapidly that they have no time to fall through a space great enough to be seen. Birds also make use of the wind to aid them in flight, and by holding their wings inclined, like a kite, so that the wind shall slide out under them, they can be carried for a physician, wherever that is practicable. In the meantime the directions we have given should be at once followed until perpetrated in for two hours, if there is the slightest hope that life may be saved, for the fact that the body has not been continuously submerged in the water for more than five minutes.—Baltimore Sun.

How Birds Fly.

You will find, if you carefully examine a bird's wing, that all the bones and muscles are placed along the front edge, which is thus made very stiff and strong. The quill feathers are fastened in such a way that they point backward, so that the front edge of the wing is not stiff like the front edge, but is flexible, and bends at the least touch. As far as I can see, but a case, it has a tendency to slide out from under the wing when this is driven downward, and of course it will do this at the point where it can most easily. Since the front edge of the wing is stiff and strong, it retains its hollow shape, and prevents the air from sliding out in this direction, but the pressure of the air is enough to bend the flexible hind edges which bend and allow the air to pass out, so that flying is nothing but sliding down a hill made of air. A bird rises by flapping its wings, and it flies by falling back toward the earth and sliding forward at the same time. At the end of each stroke of its wings it has raised itself enough to make up for the distance it has fallen since the last stroke, and accordingly it stays at the same height and moves forward in a seemingly straight line. But if you watch it closely you will see that the whole wings slowly, such as the woodpecker, you can see them rise and fall, and will have a trouble in seeing that their path is not really a straight line, but is made up of curves; although most birds flap their wings so rapidly that they have no time to fall through a space great enough to be seen. HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—To make hard sauce for puddings, stir to cream one cup butter with three cups powdered sugar; when light, beat in juice of a lemon, two teaspoons nutmeg.

—When commencing your agricultural life, remember that industry, economy and integrity will insure success, and form the best capital that can be employed.

—The soil of a garden for the growth of common species of shrubs, perennials and annuals, should be a rich loam. If any plants require sand it can easily be supplied.

—Clothespins are rendered more flexible and durable by boiling in clean water from five to ten minutes every two weeks. They should be dried quickly, and kept in strong bags, free from dust. The lines are likewise boiled every month.

—I have a large force of help on my farm and give the men plenty to do. Occasionally I get a bad, lazy fellow, but he drops out and some good man is ready to take his place. Every Saturday night, without exception, they receive their pay. A workingman likes his money. And the best way to keep a man contented is to give him plenty to do and never to disturb the little money arrangements he makes during the week by failing to pay his wages at the appointed time.—Dr. Stansbford, of Louisville.

—The American Cultivator states that some of our creameries have commenced the canning of butter for foreign markets, and that very considerable shipments had been made. The butter is packed fresh from the churn, without salt, and does not in that condition affect the tin. Danish butter has been put up in this way for some years, and this is at present its only competitor. If a successful plan can be found to completely regulate the temperature, it will be feasible to keep butter canned for years in any climate. We have heretofore given an account of Danish canned butter, and it is now said that American canned butter is superior to that. This may become a large article of export.

—Here is rather a curious remedy, but in many cases a very certain one, for the cure of indigestion. It is simply the cultivation of a habit of chewing. While out-of-doors, different kinds of green leaves, and swallowing the juice. One can always call a loaf from a hedge or a bush as one passes. Almost all are good that are not nauseous, such as those ivy, or poisonous, as the laurel-leaf. One of the latter, however, is a capital thing where there is a slight chronic irritation of the stomach. The chewing of leaves cures dyspepsia, principally, we believe, by increasing the flow of the salivary juice, and partly by the tonic and stimulating action of the leaf chewed. The leaves that occur to us, at present, as most likely to be useful are those of the pine trees, spruce or Scotch fir, blackthorn, currant and rose bushes, mint, the potato plant, the leaves and young tops of mountain daisies, the white portion of ruches, the bark of many young trees, and the tender parts of the stalks of green corn, oats or wheat, and of many larger grasses; but your own taste must, in a great measure, guide you, if you care to try the virtue of any remedy. We should say, however, that the chewing is better to take place before or before and after rather than immediately after.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

Insect Enemies.

The insect enemies of the farmer are so exceedingly numerous that it is not altogether a matter of wonder that he sometimes despairs of ever ridding himself of them. They lay in wait for the springing up or ripening of every crop, and after a season, pursue with a sharp and desperate conflict with the farmer, come off victorious at last. The Hessian fly comes to rob him of his wheat before it has scarcely started from the ground; the midge is ready to destroy what the fly happens to leave; the striped and spotted bug devastate his cucumber and melon vines; the Colorado potato beetle feasts on the potato field; the curculio is ready when his apples are ready; the curculio devours his plums, and thus we might go on to enumerate until some branch of this army of depredators could be found watching with the intention of devouring, every species of vegetation. It is scarcely a formidable foe that the farmer has to contend with, but it was never intended that it should be a permanent, much of a victory over man. If he permits himself to be conquered by an army of bugs and worms, the fault is with him, and is found in his neglect to equip himself with suitable weapons for the warfare. If a General is going to command in a battle, he should have as much knowledge of the strength, habits and condition of the enemy as it is possible for him to acquire; anything short of this would be sufficient to subject him to a court-martial. Without the knowledge defeat would be more than possible, and with it victory would be altogether probable.

Squashy true is it that detest may be expected whenever we attempt to contend with the insect enemies of the fields, unless we go into the battle intelligently and with all the knowledge that it is possible for us to obtain. Surely we need to know the nature and habits of the insect that we are attacking. We need to know how it is propagated, when it comes into life, the time it begins its depredations, its mode of attack, and how long it continues. Nothing is plainer than this, and yet how many utterly neglect the study of these things, and go to the work of attempting to destroy insects without any intelligent understanding of their habits. Such a course is simply folly, and in the dark, a stray shot occasionally hitting the object at which we ought to take deliberate aim, but the great mass of the charge being utterly wasted. From some States are now coming complaints of the ravages of the Hessian fly. Now, what are the nature and habits of the Hessian fly? When and where are its eggs laid? When do they hatch? In what particular do they injure the wheat? Hundreds can answer these questions readily and intelligently, and there are hundreds who can't. There are many who have never had occasion to study the subject, and yet all departments of entomology are legitimate studies for the farmer, and by supplying himself to them in his leisure, he would often be prepared for emergencies.

The Hessian fly lays its eggs in September; the eggs are laid upon the wheat; in a few days they hatch; the larvae then passes down the leaf into the base of the plant, and there weakens the plant by sucking the juice. In this position it becomes a pupa, and from that it reaches the fly in the spring. This fly again lays its eggs upon the wheat, and they again hatch from the stubble in mid-summer, and the same process of development is again gone through up to the perfect fly, which is ready to lay its eggs again on the early fall-sown wheat. This is the nature and habits of the Hessian fly, and what does it suggest by way of a remedy, and which would never be suggested unless we were familiar with the manner of its development? Burning the stubble is the thing suggested. If this be done soon after harvest, it is plain to be seen that the Hessian fly will have a hard time of it.

This illustrates how very important it is to understand these little enemies before we attempt their destruction. A knowledge of the habits of other insects will readily demonstrate as easy means for their destruction. The Colorado potato-beetle is an illustration. Knowing that this insect's appetite is so enormous, and that it seems to eat without tasting, we are enabled to feed it all the Paris green that it can eat before the poison kills it. A mere careful study of entomology would greatly benefit us.—Western Rural.

Corn Roots.

Careful farmers for years have avoided as much as possible cutting the roots of the corn at the last plowing. The effects of such root pruning have been seen the same day in the curling of the leaves and withering of the corn. And many contend the amount and quality is seriously injured by the plow cutting and tearing the roots. Good farmers have been inquiring for a plow which will better throw the soil to the corn, cut the weeds, but at the same time not reach the roots. But there are some men who are extremely wise, and prefer exploding all the cherished notions of their more ignorant. Mr. Sturdevant, a noted agricultural critic, has made a new discovery in cultivating corn, and he argues his theory on the world in energy of pure English. In a well written article in The Country Gentleman he states his position, as the result of many years' experiments, which are well worthy of notice, as well as further demonstration. He says he planted grains of corn in bottles of water, and in flowerpots, cutting the roots off as they appeared, and observing the results with a microscope. In every case, breaking the roots caused a great multiplication of smaller roots and spongioles to appear, the area of which was several hundredfirst per cent. greater than that of the original roots, and whose powers of absorption and assimilation were increased in proportion. Carrying his practice into the field, Mr. S. declares that he repeatedly cultivating and stirring up the soil close up to the corn for many plants, going over the ground in this way at least once a week until the tassel appears. He has found in all instances, increased the number of ears upon a single stalk to twenty-two and twenty-three, much larger and containing a greater number of grains of corn to the ears than the usual average. This yield is excessive as to very properly excite doubts among old corn growers.

Now, if the theory of Mr. S. be correct, he more the plow cuts and shakes the roots of the corn the better. Critical writers have heretofore destroyed many of the fables and legendary marks of history; but before we adopt this theory of Mr. Sturdevant, it will have to be demonstrated as correct by a commission appointed by Congress. Else,

The theory of not pruning of trees has been, that a superabundance of roots caused too great a flow of sap, and caused too large a wood growth to the detriment of the production of fruit. But Sturdevant's theory is the reverse. The cutting of one root causes the sending out of a larger number of rootlets to supply nourishment to the corn. We advise farmers to go slowly; but there is no harm in experimenting to test this theory.—Iowa State Register.

"I wish you would not give me such short weight for my money," said a customer to a grocer who had an outstanding bill against him. "And I wish you wouldn't give me such long wait for mine," replied the grocer.

We all have our preferences; but no one prefers to hear a coughing baby when the fact is so well known that Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup would at once quiet it.

AMERICANS away from home, the richest of them even, take intuitively to the habit of every man paying his own score. Our National method, when a party of friends are out together, is for one or more to be allowed to do most of the money-spending; or perhaps they treat around in turn. Either way results in somebody suffering unjustly in pocket, and is satisfactory only to the chronic sponge. Here, if two men or a dozen, by themselves or with their families, are scattering money in company, an exact reckoning is had, and each comes up with his contribution cheerfully. No sum is too small to be thus jointly liquidated. I have seen one American millionaire give another fifteen cents, his half of a cab-fare; and No. 2 took it like a little man. Nobody is expected to pay for a chance friend's good time away from home. Pray goodness that there are enough Americans abroad this year to take the custom back and make it respectable in the United States.—Paris Cor. Chicago Tribune.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Sept. 13, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The New York Herald, our great sensation paper, of whose sporting and un-American proprietor I have several times had occasion to tell your readers something, has recently broken out in a new spot. In publishing a statement of its circulation, which it claims to be the largest in the country, some days ago, it took occasion to make a violent onslaught on Geo. P. Rowell & Co. and their American Newspaper Directory, for both of whom the Herald professes a violent and rather overdone that the "Chambermaids' organ" held itself so high as to be quite oblivious of anything that might be said about it by any one; but this outburst shows that Rowell & Co.'s statement in the Directory cut too near the truth to be pleasant, and the Great American polo-player is furious. Immediately upon the Herald's publication of its figures, the Sun challenged it to submit to an examination of the books of both institutions by a committee of newspaper men, agreeing if the Herald made good its claims to forfeit $1,000. Messrs. Rowell & Co. at once came forward and offered to swell the amount to $5,000—as an inducement to the Herald to "put up or shut up." But the latter did neither. It declined the Sun's proposition, but challenged Rowell & Co. to a somewhat different test, the penalty of the beaten party to be a $25,000 forfeit to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Rowell & Co. promptly accepted the challenge, and at the same time made the Herald four other propositions, each of which displayed such confidence in the latter's lack of veracity that it was thought the paper must in self defence accept at least one of them. Instead of this it ignored them all, and contented itself by throwing a little mud at its inquisitors, claiming that Rowell's Directory was merely a scheme for blackmailing the newspapers of the country. Thus the "great American newspaper" places itself in an unenviable position. It fails to back up its assertions and it is guilty of slander. As a newspaper man, I happen to know that Rowell's Directory is neither to be bought nor intimidated, and that it is the most fearless and truthful work of the kind in the country.

Kearney is spreading. He has come to New York, and greatly astonished the clerk of the hotel at which he was stopping by asking his way to the Astor Library. His purpose, doubtless, was to hunt up fresh adjectives to hurl at the "moon eyed, leprous sons of Blontsul Bonifacides" with capital B's.

Dowdis proves himself an allen to this class by always taking up a collection for his own special benefit as the close of each harangue. After the hat has been passed around, and when the geniless jargon has gone from his listeners' ears, his hearers must wonder what it all amounts to anyway and whether they got their money's worth.

RADIX.

Charlevoix as a Summer Resort.

The following is an extract from a letter from Rev. F. E. Kittridge to the Muskegon Chronicle of Sept. 6th:

"But to speak of summer resorts again, there is no more beautiful spot, so acceptable to the people of Michigan especially, than Charlevoix. It is delightfully situated and reminds a New Englander of some portions of New Hampshire and Vermont. On one side Lake Michigan, on the other a chain of beautiful inland lakes, with cool breezes always blowing in one direction or the other, extremely hot days are never known. These inland lakes extend some 15 miles in a south-easterly direction, and are navigated by a daily line of steamers. The lakes are lined with flourishing farms on either side by scenery the most picturesque and lovely. Hudson river scenery can scarcely outvirst it in beauty. These lakes connect with the Jordan and Boyne rivers, the former stream being navigable with small boats for twelve or fifteen miles. From these rivers and small creeks that abound in this region an abundance of brook trout can be caught. About ten miles up the Jordan is a log hotel kept by a Mr. Webster, a favorite resort for pleasure seekers. He has the reputation of keeping a No. 1 house. At Charlevoix an association has been formed, composed chiefly of Baptists of Kalamazoo. Dr. Brooks and John Page of Kalamazoo College being among the leading spirits. The name of the association, which is incorporated is the Charlevoix summer resort. It is not intended to be denominational, but unsectarian in its plan and object. This association owns 25 acres of land situated about one mile from the village on a beautiful terrace overlooking Pine Lake. Any one paying ten dollars becomes a member of the association, and can select a lot, 50x100 I think upon which to build. He must, however, build within 2 years or he forfeits his claim. The object is not to dispose of the land but build up a summer resort. This is the first season of the existence of this society, but already some fifteen cottages have been erected, and as many more will be erected next summer. Their cost ranges from about fifty to three hundred dollars each. It is proposed to erect a summer hotel on the grounds another season, for the accomodation of those living in the cottages, who could take their meals there, and for transient boarders.

This season the hotel at Charlevoix, and nearly every private house, has been filled with boarders. The officers of the association have erected bathing houses along the lake shore, and a wharf has just been completed, at which steamers touch daily. I was informed by Dr Brooks that it was not designed to make of this resort a camp-meeting ground like Petoskey, but simply a summer resort of a nonsectarian character, where the hot weeks of summer could be passed in quiet and rest. Though the people comprising this resort are chiefly from Kalamazoo, at present, persons from various parts of the State of different theological proclivities will erects cottages another season. All members have half-fare privileges for themselves and families on the railroad line ending at Petoskey. Charlevoix is easily reached by stage from Petosky or by the Goodrich Steamer, Menominee, Capt. Kirtland, or by the North Western Transportation line of Steamers. I feel sure that the natural attractions of Charlevoix are such, its fishing facilities so abundant and its air so cool, healthful and refreshing that whoever visits the place once, will give it preference over either Petoskey or Mackinaw as a place of summer resort. Let me add that mosquitoes are unknown at Charlevoix."

An Undeniable Truth

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you,—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of Liver Complaint, or Dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents. Three dose s will relieve you.

MONEY to Loan, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. H. Upright, Charlevoix Mich. 16 1yr

ONE Greenbacker proposes to vote against the present county officers because last fall one of them scanned usual for county use cheaper than he (the Greenbacker) thought it ought to be sold for.

RULE.—There will be a meeting held at the town hall in this village to-morrow (Wednesday) for the purpose of organizing a Republican club. Let every Republican and friend of honest money attend.

WE were slightly in error last week on the National debt question. The total debt, less cash in Treasury, is $1,999,382,980 10 But that lacks considerable of four billions!

MONEY to Loan on good real estate security, by A. A. Beesley, Attorney at Law, Kalkaska, Mich. 16 1yr

A NEWSPAPER in a Michigan town writes and asks us if Genl. Geo. Phil. Sheridan called upon J. S. Andrews at Petoskey in August, and if the SENTINEL mentioned the circumstance. No. The SENTINEL had no knowledge of such an important event, and we venture the assertion that this is only one of the multitude of big lies that come out from under that big moustache. Emmet county papers please copy.

"ANOTHER LIE NAILED."—We were at the head of Pine Lake Friday on business, and took occasion to attend a greenback meeting in which the orator pledged the "Constitution and the Union" against the Democracy. For wholesale exaggerations he speedily can be only equalled by the inventors of Gulliver's Travels or Sinbad the Sailor. Baron Munchausen himself, were he a resident of to-day, would fade into insignificance as a rival of our modern fabricator. To record the misstatements of this insignificant cod cypher would occupy a page of this paper. He stated, re-stated, and dwelt upon the statement that the Resumption Act required the calling in and retiring of all the currency now afloat, which event would occur on the first day of January, 1879, and predicted as a result at that time such as the country never saw. For unalloyed foolish falsity this statement takes the premium. The following Act passed both houses of Congress April 29, 1878:

Be it enacted, That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer under him to cancel or retire any more United States legal tender notes. And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury under any law from the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation. Provided, That nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated notes and the issue of other notes of like denomination in their stead, as now provided by law. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Now don't repeat that lie again.

BOOTS and shoes cheaper than ever at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

REWARD.—I will pay five dollars reward for any information that will lead to the detection of the person or persons who on the night of Sept. 28th, fastened insulting placards upon the doors and windows of a certain residence in Charlevoix. A. J. McLEOD, Sheriff

Charlevoix, Sept. 30, 1878

BAD LUCK.—A Chicago paper reports that the schooner Flintwing, of this place got ashore near Frankfort on the 27th, but worked off by throwing over a part of her deckload of wood. She ran into Frankfort for shelter, and while rounding to at the dock the fore-sheet caught in some cordwood, tearing the wood and seriously injuring one of the crew.

THE Greenbackers cannot charge the SENTINEL with unfairness. We have in the past, and will during the balance of the campaign, publish their notices of meetings free of charge, and if we know any one of them we shall give them an opportunity to defend themselves in the same columns, subject to the same rules which govern all correspondence.

NOTICES are up calling a township caucus of the "National Greenback Labor Party." This smacks considerably of "Nasby." The farmers of Charlevoix county can't be fooled by any such high-sounding talk. If there is any one of the Charlevoix Greenback party managers who were ever afflicted with "labor" then the fictitious Nasby is the personification of piety, industry and temperance. "Labor!" The devil turned preacher, surely.

NEW goods arriving on every boat at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

WE visited the head of Pine Lake on Friday and noted many signs of improvement. A. J. Beardsley's grist mill is nearly ready to receive the grinding machinery, and Mr. Beardsley anticipates a good run of business. The new mill is growing into shape and will be a saw-ing before snow flies. The stores of Mr. Batchelor and Mr. Thompson seem to be thriving, as does also the hotel of Mr. Bell. The new hotel of Geo. Thompson has recently been opened to the public. Everything is in a healthy condition at the head of Pine Lake.

WHY do certain active laborers in the greenback cause in Charlevoix devote so much time to their own farm instead of working like honest people to get an honest living. He answer. They want office! They don't care whether the laboring classes or the bondholders rule, whether irredeemable currency or honest money gain the victory, only that they get AN OFFICE! They wouldn't button hole a single person in the streets of Charlevoix or elsewhere if they did not think they were making votes for them selves! Will the people of Charlevoix county look with any degree of allowance upon loafers and political adventurers, who never made a success of anything they ever undertook and who were kicked out of employ where they are known, and reluctant it where their name has preceded them, now, as the last resort of played out adventurers seek office! We cannot believe it

"All False."

The whole campaign against the Republican party is one tissue of false hoods, which are only live and deceive the people by the exercise of brass and cheek in getting it.

It is false that the five-twenty bonds were not payable in Treasury notes or greenbacks.

It is false that the original obligation has been changed by the law of 1869.

It is false that the public debt has been increased since the close of the war.

It is false that the interest-bearing obligations of the Government have been increased.

It is false to say that both the debt and the annual interest charge have not been greatly reduced.

It is false assertion to say that taxation has not greatly increased.

It is false that the Republican party has legislated for the best interest of the few.

It is false that the legislation has been intended to, or does oppress the poor.

It is false that any one instance of the laws can be cited in which the rich as a class have been favored at the expense of the poor.

It is false that contraction brought on the panic, and hard times.

It is false to say that there was any reduction of the currency in the year of the panic, and it is false to say that the currency was not increasing at that time when it was $37,000,000 more than in 1873.

It is false to say that the Government has caused any contraction of currency in the last twelve years, that at no time in that period has there been as much Treasury bank currency in circulation as the law permitted.

It is false that the funding or payment of the seven thirties and compound interest notes was a violation of contract.

It is false that notes bearing six or seven per cent. interest could long circulate as currency.

It is false to say that the issue of National currency is a monopoly, since the law makes it a free business to all who comply with the regulations.

It is false to say that National banks are not taxed, and false to say that the greenbacks are taxable.

It is false that a Government, any more than an individual, can pay a debt by simply giving a note.

THE crowded state of our columns forced further mention of our late trip, but we cannot mention one more feature of it. Our journey to Buffalo was upon the propeller Evanston City, Capt. Gibson, and Steward Dixon; our return upon Buffalo was upon the Empire State, Capt. Penny, and Steward Eby. They say that lake shipping and lake travel is declining, but while such steamers and such officers as those follow the lake route between Chicago and Buffalo, lake travel will not decline. The officers not only study the safety but the comfort of their passengers.

Highest market price paid cash for wheat at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

THE SENTINEL has in the past, and it will in the future, in our local political issues, take ground where we think is the best for the general good. It has made mistakes, but it did what it thought was best at the time. It fought its battles bravely, and cannot be charged with fear of any individual or class of individuals or hope of favor from any source. In the local campaign of this fall we shall be in the front, and will endeavor to throw as hot shot into the camp of the enemy as our leaning agreements will admit of. And, as the fight in Charlevoix county will not be so much between sides as between persons, we shall be personal, but shall confine ourself to truth and fairness. In the track we shall advocate what seems to us to be for the best interests of the people of Charlevoix county.

More of that good tea just received at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

THE National Greenbackers demand more money, yet there are two hundred millions of dollars lying idle in National, State and private banks. The reason for this is that there is no employment for it. Why will more money help the matter? Will some of our gifted Charlevoix orators tell us? If we cannot use what we have how can we use more? The real business of the country never employed its capital. Speculation used the surplus. Speculation has brought the Nation where it is, and the hard times of to-day is its direct fruit. More currency would only stimulate speculation, and multiply existing evils. There is an abundance of proof to sustain this. If the people would look it up instead of listening to the ignorant humbugs who prowl about the country seeking office through the votes of the laboring and farming classes.

THE SENTINEL.

AT one o'clock, on the afternoon of the 26th, three men entered the bank at Concordia, Mo., and one of them asked the cashier to change a ten-dollar bill. While he was doing so, another of the men jumped over the counter, caught the cashier by the arm and placed one hand over his mouth. The men then took from the safe, and put against it to the cashier's head, compelling him to open the safe. The robbers took all the paper money (between $3,000 and $4,000) there was in the safe, but refused to take the silver, of which there was between $2,000 and $3,000. The robbers then made their escape from the town on horseback. The whole affair occupied about ten minutes.

THE standard silver dollars coined up to the 30th ult., amounted to $125,000,000, of which $91,939,184 were outstanding, leaving $10,397,316 on hand. The demand for them was said to be increasing.

THE LABOR INVESTIGATION.

ON the 27th, the Committee listened to the recital of the labor statistics of Massachusetts, by Carroll D. Wright, Superintendent of the Bureau, who also took a most hopeful view of the outlook.

C. W. ELLIOTT, formerly an importer of bedding, now a cattle-raiser of Nebraska, was before the Committee, on the 28th. He thought machinery and steam combined to produce more than men could consume. This reduced wages and left many unemployed. He however, could suggest no remedy.

John Roach, shipbuilder, then took the stand. He regarded the short cause of the present trouble to be extravagant habits, formed in flush times. He was satisfied we had every natural facility for building as cheap as ships cheaper than any other country in the world. He then dealt at length upon the advantage of using United States vessels for carrying mails, etc., thus giving employment to American seamen.

Cyrus Hussey, President of the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, was next called. He spoke for some time on the value of the Mississippi River as one of the chief outlets for the products of the country, was strongly in favor of the immediate increase of American shipping, and to an extra penalty on vessels thought for that purpose the Government should give them a bonus. He believed that $6,000,000 spent in subsidies would be about the best investment the Government could make.

Geo. A. Potter, merchant, of New York City, next took the stand and asserted that one of the principal causes of the present depression was the importance of political economy and the prostitution of legislative power. Another cause was depreciated currency and unequal taxation. He thought the country could not carry more than $200,000,000 of paper currency with safety, and thought the Government ought to redeem the surplus paper money at the rate of $100 in gold for $103 in currency.

The Committee adjourned to meet next in New Orleans, and then in Chicago.

The Yellow-Fever Panic at the South—How It Affects Railroad Travel.

The Philadelphia Times of a recent date gives the following account of the traveling experiences in the South of a gentleman connected with a well-known shoe house of that city:

He went there two months ago to sell goods in Middle Tennessee and Alabama, where he had an experience in quarantine and railroads which the believes he has cometo remember. Once a man gets on a train, there is no telling where he will leave it. Quarantine officers board the cars on some railroads at every station, to find if there are any passengers from New Orleans, Memphis, Grenada or other points where disease is raging. If any are found, they are hustled off in short order and commanded to steer clear of the town. On this experience passengers were not allowed to get off the cars in many instances, and were arrested sometimes nearly a hundred miles beyond their destination.

"To what road were your experiences chiefly confined?" the writer asked him yesterday.

"On the Alabama Central and the Mobile & Ohio. The train on which I traveled on the Mobile & Ohio Road ran from Mobile to Tupelo without stopping to allow passengers to get anything to eat. It was a seven hours' ride. The last meal we got was at Meridian, about four o'clock in the afternoon. It was twelve o'clock in the next day before we reached Tupelo and took our next meal. I was on my way to this place and my destination was to change cars at Corinth, directly west from Tupelo, and go straight to Iuka, Miss. It was the short and direct route, but when we reached Corinth we were quarantined against us, and no passengers would be allowed to get off. I had to go on to Union City, which is situated on a parallel line with Louisville, but away to the west. Here I found myself in a country town, with Nashville and from Nashville northwest to Louisville. It is one of the most out-of-the-way places possible to find, but it was the only way to reach my destination. Refugees are scattered all through Middle Tennessee and Northern Alabama. People from Memphis, Grenada, Jackson and other points have taken refuge in every direction, and hundreds of them are to be found in Jacks and farm-houses and towns in the mountains east and west of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

"The railroads which are quarantined against are the Mississippi Central, the Mobile & Ohio, the Memphis & Louisville, the Memphis & Charleston, the Iron Mountain, the Alabama & Chattanooga, and the Alabama Central. The Mississippi Central is quarantined against from Hernando, DeSoto County, on the Mississippi River, and through or adjacent to all intervening places where yellow fever is now raging—Vicksburg, Canton, Grenada, Memphis and other points. The train I traveled on running both ways south of Memphis would have been quarantined against. It was this road and the Alabama Central I traveled on most.

"I heard of a boat from Vicksburg traveling on the Alabama Central, who could not get to Decatur, Ala. A quarantine officer, finding there he was coming, ordered him to get on the train again, stating that he would be allowed to go about any train from yellow-fever districts who desired.

"On the train with myself on the Mobile & Ohio, to Louisville, was a gentleman from Boston, who owned a large store in Memphis and spent part of the year in the city. He had just shipping in little Rock, Ark., and was on his way to Memphis to get out of the place to go to Boston. He was unable to get his baggage checked any further than Louisville, and finally shipping fast to Boston.

"Another passenger on this train told me of a family in Memphis, which I, myself, I heard it verified by others, and then I had to believe it. He stated that seven of a family, a train, on which there were also two persons from Memphis, had been stopped by the quarantine officers at a little flock over one hundred miles out of town, and the whole party put off in a swampy place, with occasional houses, but that of an odd lot. In this party was a child fourteen years old, whose several sweethearts without knowing it was there, had appeared at the houses in the neighborhood, people would point their guns at them and order them to keep away. So, my first informant told me, that on the 2d day the child died a quarantine officer to go out with him and bury the child. The quarantine officer, of those had yellow fever. The quarantine officer, however, declined, but insisted that there were two days longer before the allowed time would expire.

"Another case I was told of was also corroborated by others. When the fever first appeared in Memphis a young lady from Little Rock, who had been visiting there, returned home, and died at Little Rock. In a few days it was found out she had come from Memphis, and the authorities made her leave the town.

"Refugees have flocked to the mountain districts of Northern Alabama and Middle Tennessee in large numbers. At Beersville Springs, in Tennessee, where I spent a sunday, I found about four from New Orleans, Memphis and other points. At Bluntsville, in Alabama, there were between 400 and 500 refugees. They were suffering from scarcity of provisions in the towns to a considerable extent.

In Jackson, Miss., I passed through without butter for breakfast. In Nashville, the market dollsdled down greatly. The country people are afraid to come into the towns through which there is any traffic from the yellow-fever sections, and that is one of the reasons the railroads are in some places so strictly quarantined."

The Fever in Grenada.

The following extracts are from a letter forwarded to a gentleman in New York City. The writer has lived among the scenes described since the breaking out of the fever:

"I do not know wherein or how to begin a description of the condition of fever-stricken Grenada. Every darkness to the right and left and to the left of our own home are dead. Some, terrified, the blinds closed, the doors locked, and I have little doubt that in such there are the corpses of those who could not survive. For hours together I hear not a human stirring in the once happy old neighborhood. The grocery stores are closed up, and nearly all those engaged in the business have fallen victims to the scourge or fled from town. Scarcely a child young and old remains, women looking after the sick and dying. Coffins are scattered all through Middle Tennessee and Northern Alabama. People from Memphis, Grenada, Jackson and other points have taken refuge in every direction, and hundreds of them are to be found in Jacks and farm-houses and towns in the mountains east and west of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

"The railroads which are quarantined against are the Mississippi Central, the Mobile & Ohio, the Memphis & Louisville, the Memphis & Charleston, the Iron Mountain, the Alabama & Chattanooga, and the Alabama Central. THE CLOUD.

The cloud by day hung in the heavens
Like a little cloud of vapor;
And lightly rode upon the breeze
Where the rosy-cheeked lovers walk the West
Bell and gone on their journal road.
While the good stalwart it gleamed.

It looked such a harmless chondlet,
Seem over the sleeping wave,
And the less worried mariner shook his head,
As slowly it crept over the dusky sky.
"See that rocket times are clear," he said,
And his lips set stern and grave.

And ever over the eve was midnight,
That cloud was lowering black,
Blinding the lights of Heaven
Dimming the lustre of the Autumn spray,
The lightning played in fitful gleams
While thunders broke on their track.

"Mark, Allie!" cried Georgie, scrambling down the side of the cave, "We can wade, may be."

I followed him, and we crept out upon the beach. The water had risen breast-high already, and I was nearly thrown down by the force with which it met me.

"Lean on me, Allie," said Georgie, throwing his arm about me and struggling onward. "We must get to the rocks as soon as we can."

It was even more difficulty that we passed the narrow strip of sand between the cliffs. I clung with Georgie, trying in vain to keep a firm footing on the treacherous sand, that seemed slipping from beneath my feet at every step.

The water had reached my neck. I felt a little quieter when the boy had finished. Georgie's strong, sweet faith strengthened me unawares, and involuntary I repeated the little prayer also. Then we were at the rocks once more. I was strangely weak and weary. The fear of death was gone now; I thought no more of Georgie together. I think I was half lapsing into unconsciousness when Georgie's voice half-aroused me.

"Allie! Allie!" he cried. "Wake up! You are slipping down! Oh, Allie, dear, do try to get up! You'll be drowned!" But even this failed to arouse me from the stupor into which I had fallen. I felt myself slipping from my grasp. Already my feet were in the water, and the spray was dashing about my head. I heard Georgie call me once again, felt my hands firmly grasped in his, and then I knew nothing more.

"Allie, dear little Allie!" I opened my eyes at the words. Somebody's arms were about me; warm tears were falling on my head and on the scent of roses was in the air. Where was I? Was this my own little bed, with its snowy curtains and soft, fresh pillows? Was Baby Robin lying beside me, stroking my cheek with his tiny hand? I was not dead, then? Where were the water and the cold sea-weed? A kiss fell on my forehead, and a voice murmured soft love-words in my ear. Alice! my little girl! Mamma's darling!

Then I raised my head and looked straight into my mother's sweet, tearful eyes. "Mamma," I said, throwing my arms around her neck. "O, mamma, I was so afraid I wasn't going to!"

"But you are safe, Allie, now. Lie down again, dear. You are weak yet."

So I lay back on the soft pillow with a feeling of rest and comfort in my heart, such as had never been there before. I cared to ask no questions. It I think of it now only as a dream, with my mother beside my bed and the early sunbeams flickering on the wall opposite me. It was a long time before I thought of poor Georgie. When I asked for him, mamma's eyes filled with tears. "Dear Allie," she said, "Georgie saved your life. My little girl would have been taken away from me, but for him. He caught you when you slipped, and, tired as he was, held you up till help came. He fainted as soon as papa took him into the boat. We thought you were both dead!" Her voice broke in a sob, and she clasped me closer in her arms. "He is better now," she went on. "Allie, we must never forget his courage. Thank God, he was with you!"

"Mamma, O mamma!" I cried, "he said he was trying to be like Saint Georges. Isn't he like him? He saved me, and he prayed there in the dark—and, O mamma, I have to pray for it!"

"Yes, Allie," answered my mother, "he one of the old Knights was braver than ours, and not one of all the saints did better service in the sight of God than our little Saint Georgie last night."

COFFEE.—A writer in the Country says he enjoyed "the genuine stimulant" in almost every coffee-growing country, and never met with it in such complete perfection as in the mountains of San Domingo, made by the natives. They take the fresh berries and parch them for a few minutes, then scrash them in a mortar, and for each person put a tablespoonful of the fragrant fragments into a conical-shaped bag; the exact quantity of cocoa cuptuls or boiling water is measured out and poured below through the bag. This completes the process, and the result is—nectar.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A tramp at Remington, Vt., asked for work the other day, and was told there was nothing else to give him to do unless he gathered potato-bugs at ten cents a quart. "Very well, I'll try," said he. The first day he "picked" thirty quarts, and the next day twenty-five quarts, amounting to $5.50. Then his employer put him to doing something else.

—A family in Paterson, N. J., trains toads for pets, caring for them in great numbers in the garden, where they follow people about like kittens through the walks. In the cellar, where there are half a score or more, these social creatures sit about, looking wisely upward while the churning is done, and one warty old fellow always occupies with evident satisfaction during the operation the boot-toe of the churner, a perch that he never quits so long as he is not shaken off.

—As furniture in a tenement house at Fall River, Mass., was being transferred to a wagon, the wife carefully wrapped in a large comforter her little baby and put it on the bed in an upper chamber. A little later someone down by the wagon called to a man who entered the chamber to throw down something loose for packing to protect some articles. The man seized the rolled-up comforter and flung it out of the window. It was caught by a woman, who, finding a lump in it, unfolded it to find the child unharmed.

—The circulation of almanacs being limited in Texas, the negroes in the path of the late eclipse did not know what was to happen, and were overcome with fright. On Senator Coke's plantation, near Waco, they fell on their knees in the fields, and exclaimed that the day of judgment had come. In Buchanan, where the eclipse began, Ephraim Miller ran into his house, split his son's head open with a hatchet, and rushed by a ladder to the roof, and cut his throat from ear to ear. His wife at the same moment ran out into the fields to hear Gabriel's trumpet, and screamed, "Come, sweet chariot!"

—The 6:40 p. m. express from Boston was struck by lightning yesterday afternoon on the Charleston grade, and narrowly escaped disaster. The bolt struck the engine by the right cylinder, enveloping the whole machine in an electric flame, knocking the fireman, Flaherty, partially insensible, and for a moment disabling Osgood, the engineer, who, whipping his hand off the throttle and nearly blinding him. The reverse was set several inches into the air, but reached the track again all right, and the whole train was hauled up through off the track. The passengers hair stood on end for several minutes, but none were hurt.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

—A notion peddler in Clarion County, Pa., dreamed that he had found a hidden treasure, and presented upon a farmer, named Logue, to accompany him to the spot. The peddler pointed out a large oak as the one he saw in his vision. It was apparently sound at the butt, but, about twenty feet up, a limb had been broken off. Mr. Logue did not feel like humoring what he supposed to be a superstitious whim, but Goodman had such confidence in his vision that he offered Mr. Logue one-half of the spoils if he would help him cut down the tree. When the tree fell there was a rattle of coins near where the limb had been broken off, and a small hollow was found. Enscouced therein were loads of silver. Both seemed to be wild with delight, and on counting it up, found the pile amounted to $8,000. The peddler expressed his unwillingness to carry around so much silver in his pocket, and inquired where he would be likely to get greenbacks for his share. Mr. Logue having considerable money in the house, immediately gave Goodman $2,800 in paper money and took charge of the entire bulk of silver. On endeavoring to pass some of the silver, it was found to be counterfeit of the poorest kind. It was a clever job of a gang of counterfeiters.

Bartholdi's Colossal Statue.

The work on Bartholdi's gigantic figure of "Liberty Enlightening the World," to be placed on Bedloe's Island, in the Bay of New York, is rapidly progressing in the Paris workshop. The height of the statue, from the sole of her classic foot to the extreme end of the torch in her outstretched hand will be 160 feet; the granite pedestal will have a height of 105 feet, giving a total altitude of 229 feet from the surface of the grassy mound. The lady's coronet is pierced with a circle of windows, from which brilliant lime lights will stream after dark; while the end of the torch—large enough to seat fifteen persons—will be a means of flame lobt alight in the darkness. The effect of these flaring beams above, however, will be to throw the figure itself into deep shadow, unless some light is also furnished at the base. The project, in its inception, seems to have been due to a number of Republican Frenchmen, "invested in their own country, and loving America," who wished to do something in honor of the Centennial year. These gentleman formed a society, the Franco-American Union, and appointed a committee, among whom are Waddington, Laboulaye, Rousseau, About and De Tocqueville, to prepare plans and raise the necessary means; the arrangement being that France shall furnish the statue and America the pedestal. Fifty workmen are now engaged, in a building constructed for the purpose, in hammering the sheets of copper, which, when riveted together, will compose this stupendous specimen of womanhood. The copper sheets are nineeighth of an inch thick, and, when in position, will be supported by an inner sheet of iron, divided into compartments, leaving a foot of space to be filled in with sand. This, with the wind-bracing system in the interior of the figure, it is believed, will impart the requisite strength, weight and stability. The forear

WHAT IS A DOLLAR?

An Unanswerable Answer to the Question.

From the Chicago Times.

The following request comes from Whitehall, Mich.: "Will you please inform a number of your readers what is a dollar, what makes it a dollar, and whether a greenback dollar is a dollar or a promissory note?"

The word dollar is the name of something. That something is what the law declares it shall be. At present the law declares that that something shall be a coin of silver weighing 412½ grains and nine-tenths fine, or a coin of gold weighing 25.8 grains and nine-tenths fine. The law provides for the manufacture of gold and silver coins of a certain weight and fineness, and calls those coins dollars. Calling them dollars is simply giving them a name. The name might be slug, or disk, or lump, or anything else as well as dollar. Calling a thing a dollar does not change its value any more than calling a sheep's tail a leg makes it a leg. The law might call a silver coin of 100 grains a dollar, but that would not make it of equal value with a silver coin of 412½ grains. The law might call a slip of paper a dollar, as our "fiat"-money philosophers propose that it shall, but that would not make the slip of paper worth as much as a gold coin weighing 25.8 grains. The law can make the slip of paper as efficient as the gold coin in paying debts, but it cannot make the former equal in value to the latter, or, indeed, give it any commercial value whatever. Hon. O. A. Grow put the matter very clearly in a recent speech:

"Legislature can neither make or unmake real values. Money in its real value is the creature of trade and commerce, not of Governments. Governments can fix the debt-paying value of money for its own citizens by legal tender laws, but not its value for trade and commerce. That is fixed by the dealers themselves in the commodities for which money is exchanged. And the rate of exchange is adjusted to a ratio of value in the market, of either the commodities or money, based upon the cost, the demand and supply of the articles exchanged.

"The promise to deliver a thing is not the thing itself, and a thing of no intrinsic value is not the equivalent of labor, and no legislative enactment can make it such. It may be used as such temporarily, under the stress of some over-ruling necessity, but, if continued any length of time, will, by the lucrative expansion and contraction that must follow, end in bankruptcy and ruin; like the evil spirits in the time of our Saviour, they only rend and destroy their possessor."

The question, what makes a thing a dollar, is already answered. It is the law. That is, the law declares to what thing the name dollar shall be given, but it does not thereby impart any real value to that thing. As Mr. Grow says, it is the cost, the demand and supply that determine the real value.

Is a greenback dollar a dollar, or a promissory note? The law answers that question. What we call greenbacks are unlawfully called "United States notes" in all the acts of Congress in which they are mentioned. The first act authorizing them provides for the issue of $150,000,000 of United States notes, not bearing interest, payable to the bearer at the treasury of the United States." It also provides for the conversion of those notes, "payable to bearer," into six per cent. bonds, "redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years, and payable twenty years after date." It would be absurd to make coin dollars fundable into bonds payable in coin dollars.

The next act relating to greenbacks, that of July 11, 1862, provides for an additional issue of $150,000,000 "of United States notes, not bearing interest payable to bearer at the treasury of the United States." It also, like the former act, makes these notes fundable into six per cent. bonds through the instrumentality of certificates of deposit, and adds: "Provided, however, that any notes issued under this act may be paid in coin, instead of being received in exchange for certificates of deposit, as above specified, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury." From this it will be seen not only that greenbacks are promissory notes payable in coin, but that a Resumption act was passed sixteen years ago. Perhaps that is the cause of the hard times!

This joint resolution of January 17, 1863, authorizes the issue "on the credit of the United States" of $100,000,000 more "United States notes * * * not bearing interest, payable to bearer on demand". The act of March 3, 1863, authorizes $50,000,000 more of these "United States notes," "payable to bearer." The Public Credit act of March 18, 1869, declares "that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes." In short, there is no act of Congress in which the greenbacks are referred to as anything but promissory notes of the United States, or obligations of the United States, to be either funded into six per cent. bonds or redeemed in coin.

The courts have repeatedly decided that the greenbacks are notes to be paid. In the case of Bank v. Supervisors, reported in seven Wallace, the Supreme Court of the United States declared: "It is clear that these notes are obligations of the United States. Their name imports obligation, and every one of them bears on its face a promise to pay a certain sum. The dollar note is a promise to pay a dollar, and the dollar intended is the coin dollar of the United States—a certain weight and fineness of gold and silver." In the opinion of the court in the legal-tender cases, decided in 1871, Justice Strong says: "The legal-tender acts do not attempt to make paper a standard of value. We do not rest their validity upon the assertion that their emission is coinage, or any regulation of the value of money; nor do we assert that Congress may make anything which has no value money. What we do assert is, that Congress has power to enact that the Government's promises to pay money, shall be, for the time being, equivalent in value to the representative of value determined by the Coinage acts, or to multiplies thereof. * * * It is, then, a mistake to regard legal tender acts as either fixing a standard of value, or regulating money values, or making that money which has no intrinsic value." These decisions settle the question whether greenbacks are dollars or promises to pay dollars. They are merely promises to pay. They are not dollars any more than the 5-20 bonds, or any other bonds of the United States are dollars. Congress has done a good many foolish thing, but has never done anything so foolish "as to enact that a piece of paper should be a dollar, or to declare that stamping pieces of paper was the same thing as coining money. It may go to that extreme folly because it has the power to say what shall be called a dollar, and what shall be tender for a dollar in paying a debt. But if it should go to this length it would soon learn that the power to call a worthless thing a dollar is something very different from the power to create value out of nothing.

Grave-Digging Beetles.

One of the wonderful provisions of Nature is the existence of certain beetles with the function of digging graves for dead rats, moles, birds and other small creatures left upon the surface of the earth, and the offspring from which might be offensive and hateful. Beetles of this kind are known as the Necrophorus vernaceus. About these remarkable animals Mr. Gledhich, an entomologist, has given us several interesting and curious particulars. Being desirous to test the strength of the gravediggers, he provided a glass vessel half filled with moist earth, into which he put four beetles with a dead linnet. No alarm was shown by the captives when the lid of the vessel was closed. Apparently intent on the one sole object of their existence, they began immediately to inspect the bird, and then commenced the digging of a hollow underneath it, removing the earth and shovelling it away on each side. This was accomplished by leaning strongly upon their collars, holding down their heads and working with singleness of purpose. After labouring for nearly two hours, one of the beetles was driven away and not allowed to work again. This Mr. Gledhich concluded, was a female, as it was smaller than the others, which continued their labor, until one by one they ceased, leaving only one inside at his work. After some more hard work were given by the remaining beetle, which at last sank excavated on a mound in the mould from his task, and, rapidly, suddenly rousing himself, suffered his collar, and by an extraordinary effort of strength lifted up the bird and arranged it within the spacious grave. In three days the grave was finished, and the bird safely deposited within its narrow limits.

During a space of fifty days these busy workers interred the bodies of four frogs, three small birds, two grass moppers and one mole. This singular occupation, which continues from the middle of April until the end of October, proceeds from an instinctive desire for the preservation of their offspring. Eggs deposited by the parent in the carcasses would, in due time, when hatched, produce larvæ, which, feeding on the carrion which surrounds them, would certainly perish. These instinctive acts change into yellow chrysalids, and lastly into beetles, and the future will encourage from the earth, begin to dig graves and inter dead animals for the benefit of another generation.

In September, 1877, the writer had unexpectedly an opportunity of making the acquaintance of these curious insects. Two of the gravedigging beetles made their appearance in one of two under-ground kitchens, in the window of which stood a very large pot filled with mold prepared for the reception of plant cuttings. To this pot the insects made their way, and at once began casting up the earth. On being observed, they were provided with a dead mouse, and set to work exactly in the manner described by Mr. Gledhich; but as weeks drew by became tired and rested from their labor, they were satisfied with the adjoining kitchen and placed close to the fire-place. The following morning discovered them again at work, acting traveled to their former quarters during the night; and again they showed perseverance and ingenuity of the mouse gradually disappeared. At the end of the second day, it was totally covered in, and the insects were turned out of their home and again placed in the back kitchen. Meanwhile the body of the mouse was removed, but on the following morning the beetles had returned to their former post, and were again burrowing in search of the dead mouse, throwing out nearly the whole of the mold in their untiring efforts. Finally, as a reward for their industry and perseverance, they were transferred to the garden and placed close to the dead mouse, which they at once began to inter afresh.

Opium and Famine in China.

OPIUM and famine prevent a very rapid increase of the population of China. In a single year the Chinese importation of opium amounted to nearly $50,000,000—more than half the importations of the Empire. The people are diseased, degraded, the Government is wholly unable to control it. Once they destroyed 20,000 chests, for which had been offered $11,000. They had wanted too long. Opium-smoking had become a National indulgence. The native cultivators now compete with the producers of India, and are even said to the market millions of chests. The native article is less destructive than the foreign, and in the hope that its use will lessen the evil, the Government encourages home cultivation. It is believed the home article will soon exclude the foreign. Many of the Chinese believe opium the instrument in the hands of some mysterious power to effect the destruction of their people. They say, "All the stems of the bamboos of the South, if converted into pens, could not record the evils of opium." A Chinese Society has published an appeal in which they ask: "If this evil is allowed to go on, there will remain no remedy, no salvation for our country. We ask, in the name of Heaven, what unheard-of crime have we committed that we should thus be punished? Since the creation down to our days no plague has so much ravaged our country." In the Provinces where the drug is cultivated the people were formerly sober, thrifty and prosperous; but they have become idle, corrupt and hopeless, committing crimes for opium, dying of hunger, and in not a few instances eating even human flesh. The number of opium consumers is not known. The lower classes do not use it, but the very highest, and those offer it to their guests as wine is offered in Europe. The City of Ningpo, with a population of 56,666, has 2,700 opium shops. It is estimated that throughout the Empire 60,000 opium victims die yearly. Though the use of the deadly drug does not produce the violent effects of some other intoxicants at first, it is in the end more pernicious and irremediable. Its victims become livid, their eyes lose their brightness, their cheeks wither, labor is unendurable, and all their evil instincts are unnaturally excited.

The Chinese say that only England can assist them in recovery. If recovery be possible, from this dreadful curse, and that by restraining the merchants of India from offering it for sale in their countries. Others assured that none could be allowed to be sent from India, the Imperial Government would prohibit its home production. The Chinese Government appeals to England for a restrictive policy.

Such a famine as is now raging in the Provinces of Shansi, Chihli, Honan and Shensi, in Northern China, was never before known in any country. Like Mr. Chadwick somewhere, was female, as it was smaller than the others, which continued their labor, until one by one they ceased, leaving only one inside at his work. Five hundred more hard work were given by the remaining beetle, which at last sank exhausted on a mound in the mould from his task, and, rapidly, suddenly rousing himself, suffered his collar, and by an extraordinary effort of strength lifted up the bird and arranged it within the spacious grave. In three days the grave was finished, and the bird safely deposited within its narrow limits.

The Town of Nikosia in Cyprus.

THE man who, after a prolonged residence in Nikosia, can find his way through its tortuous thoroughfares to any given destination deserves a medal from the Geographical Society.

The place is a maze, and a maze without a plan; the houses are all so like each other in their patchwork dilapidation, in their balcony overhanging the folding doors, in their beans of earth up against the walls, in their closely-latticed windows, in their dilighness; the streets are all so alike in their dogs, in their gutter running along the center, which, however, is not a sewer, but a conduit of clear water that conveys irrigation to the gardens by ducts made under the houses; in their loafers, fezzed men and yellow bright-eyed women leaning against the walls or sitting on chairs in their doorways, in the half-naked babies, in their casual heaps of rubbish, in their treacherous holes, in their smells.

We cite this one of many instances which have come to our knowledge to indicate how far we may be sure by many of those artisans with us who are now out of employment.

To our mind the past years of prosperity, of high wages and excessive demand for workmen were, generally speaking, far more hurtful to the laboring classes than the last seven years of depression and stagnation, for in the recent and present times are sown the seeds of native manufacture, coarse but stout, and that is about all. If finer furniture is wanted it must be sent for to Beyrout. There is a tailor in the place, who carries in his shop a broad thin portion, which is called the nose. The vane on one side of the shaft is quite broad and flexible, while that on the other side is narrow and stiff, and by looking at a wing with the feathers in their places, you will find that they are placed so that they overlap a little like the slats on a window-blind. Each broad vane runs under the narrow vane of the feather beside it, so that, when the wing is moved downward each feather is pressed up against the stiff narrow vane of the one beside it, and the whole wing forms a solid sheet like a blind with the slats closed. After the down-stroke is finished and the upstroke begun, the feathers, relieved from the lower surface of the wing, and begins to act on the upper surface and to press the feathers downward instead of upward. The broad vane now have nothing to support them, and they bend down and allow the air to pass through the wing, which is now like a blind with the slats open. By these two contrivances—the shape of the wing, and the shape and arrangement of the feathers—the bird is enabled to lift when heavier articles of food would be rejected. The bromide of potassium is to be used carefully and only in cases of extreme nervousness, the dose being from fifteen to twenty grains, dissolved in water. This is the publication of the method of treatment adopted at the Inebriate asylum.

In addition there is the drinking-man should surround himself with influences which tend to make him forget the degrading associations of the barroom and lift him upward. He should endeavor, so far as his business circumstances will permit, to sleep, bathe and eat regularly, and obey the laws of health. By the adoption of this course energetically and sincerely no man who has the will to reform can fail to do so. Hundreds and thousands have proved the truth of these statements.—Boston Traveller.

A Bird's Wing.

Did you ever look at a bird's wing carefully, and try to find out from it the way in which it is used? People naturally suppose, either that a bird flies because it is lighter than the air, like a balloon, or that it rows itself along as a boat is rowed through the water. Neither of these suppositions is true. A bird is not lighter than the air, and does not float, for when a bird is shot on the wing it falls to the ground just as quickly as a sparrow. On the contrary, a bird flies by its own weight, and could not fly at all if it were not heavier than the air.

Look at a quill feather, and you will see that, on each side of the central shaft or quill, there is a broad thin portion, which is called the vane. The vane on one side of the shaft is quite broad and flexible, while that on the other side is narrow and stiff, and by looking at a wing with the feathers in their places, you will find that they are placed so that they overlap a little like the slats on a window-blind. Advice to Drinking Men.

A drinking man can supply himself easily with the remedies most of us nearly all the medicine he takes, and he has his own physician at his own home, without the necessary expense and publicity of visiting the Washingtonian Home or any other reformatory institution.

His laboratory need contain only a small quantity of cayenne pepper, a pint of concentrated extract of beef and a few grains of bromide of potassium. When the desire for drink recurs, make a tea from the cayenne pepper, as strong as can be taken without any degree of comfort, sweeten it with milk and sugar, and drink. This tea will supply the same place that a glass of liquor would fill, and will leave no injurious effect behind. Repeated daily, or so often as the appetite returns, it will be but a few days before the sufferer will have become disgusted with the taste of rum, and, with the disappearance of this disgust disappears the love of liquor.

The fact is proven every day. The extract of beef is to be made into beef tea, according to the directions on the pot, in quantities as may be needed to, the time being, and remains a strengthening, easily digestible and healthy nutriment. It being made "to stay on the stomach" when heavier articles of food would be rejected. The bromide of potassium is to be used carefully and only in cases of extreme nervousness, the dose being from fifteen to twenty grains, dissolved in water. Oh, Why?

Why is it that every man who owns a horse, thinks he has a "stepper," and firmly believes that the animal would go like the wind if he were "let out?"

That nobody ever thinks of sitting in a summer house?

That hunting parties from the city always kill so many more prairie chickens than they bring in?

That so many more watch chains are worn than watches?

That no matter what direction a man starts a pin, the point always ultimates in the end of the fore-finger?

That a woman is always glad to see her poor relations come to visit her, but dislikes their children with them?

That a child's first venture at dogmatism is a reason.)

That no man thinks any other man knows how to make a fire?

That every living man who smokes objects to be a commissioner in cigars?

That bankers never leave any money to loan?

That the oftener the coffee is "ground," the more you have to buy, while the oftener the candle is "cast," the longer it lasts?

That your boy who never goes farther from home than the next corner, is accurately informed when he returns on matters that transpired at the river, two miles away?—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Brigandage in Chili.

The Panama Star and Herald, of a recent date, says brigandage is apparently on the increase in Chili. In the southern part of the State bands of desperadoes banding themselves together for purposes of robbery and murder. These bands are large and formidable, are thoroughly organized and have apparently intelligent leadership, and can only be resisted and overcome by organized force. The recent of their crimes is something appalling. Murders the most revolting horrify the community, and are committed with apparently no other object in the world than to destroy without to the foul deeds, on the principle that dead men tell no tales. One of these bands consists of forty men, who are under the command of a scoundrel who almost excels in ferocity Neon Saville. They have their headquarters near Lebu, and no passer-by, except in daylight and under peculiarly fortunate circumstances, escapes with his property and life. The police appear to be utterly powerless to control the evil, either from want of strength of organization, or the lack of purpose. The evil has become so serious that it calls loudly for Government interference. The bandits are of the very lowest order, usually half-breeds and demoralized Indians, naturally vicious and ignorant, who were led in crime by their own brutish instincts, and encouraged in it through the laxity of the laws and the inefficiency of the magistrates and police. Now that their Congress is in session, Chile-nos should see to it that this moral excrescence is promptly and effectively removed."

A strange story comes to us from down river. Mr. Frank Billings, an old fisherman, near the upper dock on the river, while running his trotline a few days since, found that he had hung a monster catfish. In order to make sure of his game, he grappled the line around his wrist. The fish, making a desperate effort for liberty, upset the skiff, and the fisherman, being unable to disentangle himself from the line, was dragged under the water and drowned before assistance could reach him. Some neighbors on the bank witnessed the catastrophe, and hastened to the scene, but too late. They recovered the body of the drowned man, and then secured the fish, which weighed 225 pounds. This statement comes to us so well authenticated that we cannot doubt its truth.—Hart County (Ky.) Democrat.

Independence Among Artisans.

A number of years since a hosiery factory was started in one of our country towns, and the workmen for it imported from England and Wales for a time, while all went on well, but finally the company failed and the works were permanently closed.

When deprived of the factory work, most of these men recognizing that work was better than idleness and bread more satisfying than any amount of grumbling, instead of becoming burdens upon the community in which they had cast their lot, set up, each of them, a hand loom or two in his little house or room, and continued the manufacture of the goods which they had produced at the factory, and by the aid of the goods of stockingers disposed of them to such advantage that now they are all in independent circumstances, and with difficulty supply the demand for their especial productions.

—We give it up. Of all the weeds in this world we supposed the cocklebur, while it was the most offensive, was the most worthless. But it is now recommended as a certain cure for hydrophobia.—Iowa State Register.

—Cleaning Cistern Water.—Add two ounces powdered alum and two ounces borax to a twenty-barrel cistern of rain-water that is blackened or oily, and in a few hours the sediment will settle and the water be clarified and fit for washing and even for cooking purposes.—Exchange.

—The Country Gentleman gives the following remedy for chicken cholera: Five grains of powdered prepared chalk, the same quantity of cinnbarb, and three grains of cayenne pepper, mixed, and formed into a pill with cinnilage, may be given, and if necessary repeated in two hours. Give water to drink in which is placed some unslacked lime.

—A German farmer sets a high value on pigs, for the economics of feed mixes and other weeds. He throws all the refuse of his table to the pigs, and they are healthy and fat. He says that the plague of mice so prevalent in Germany is in great measure due to the present system of keeping swine penned up instead of allowing them the range of the fields, as was formerly the custom. He states that a careful observer may often detect pigs in the act of snapping up and devouring a good-sized mouse. Inside which they may have an extraordinary keen scent for the nests, grubbing them up in search of the young mice, which they eagerly devour.

—Rules for the Care of Sheep.—1. Keep sheep dry under foot with clean litter. This is more necessary than feeding them. Never let them stand or lie in the mud or snow. 2. If a ewe loses her lamb, milk her daily for a few days, and feed her on bran slightly laxative. 3. Never frighten sheep, if possible to avoid it. 4. Separate all weak, sick or thin sheep in the fall from those that are strong, and give them special care. 5. If any sheep is lame, catch it, ease and wash the wound with a healing lotion. If a leg is broken, bind it with splinters tightly, loosening as the limb swells. 6. If a sheep is lame, examine its foot, clean out between the hoofs, if unsound, apply tobacco, with blue vitriol boiled in a little water. 7. Shear all sheep early enough commencing to shear in time to give them a good growth of wool before winter sets in. Keep the sheep comfortable.—Exchange.

—What are commonly considered as some of the juices of fruits are sometimes merely sugar syrup and then frozen, like ice cream. It is stated that the best ices are made in this way, leaving the sugar in the form of syrup, having the strength of 30 deg. The fruit juices are then added, with a little water and fine sugar, and this is but a sample of the hundreds that are engaged in the same business.

Thousands in our artisans could thus make themselves and families independent of corporations and capital, and become against the pressure of hard times.

Of course, it is not to be expected that all the artisans thus employed would be found in their manufactories of improved machinery, nor that they could be sold at such a profit as if they were manufactured on a large scale; but the independent workman would be better off under such profits as are necessary to the life of a corporation, with its costly buildings and machinery, as this stupid politician, or mere politician, is so fond of saying, are the only means by which any intelligence of whatever kind of profit can be applied to, in a measure sufficient for his needs and comfort.

While we would advise and encourage to the utmost general independent work of this kind, we recognize the necessity of another element to insure its pecuniary success.

Established in most cities are women's aid societies, whose charitable interference is to find out all the unmarriable articles of women's handwork, and whose salary in this direction have kept distress and despair from many households. These societies supply a want long and keenly felt, willing and skilful hands there were, but they could not keep the wolf from the door without the intervention of this powerful ally.

All over the land, too, in every town and city, associations of mechanics have established stores, "union" stores they are called, for the purchase of provisions and groceries at lower prices, and the sale of them to the members of the associations at but little above cost, thereby securing to this class the benefits of co-operation, and to the laboring man the handiwork of the independent workman.

We know of prosperous firms in England who did not begin by any capital to speak of, but by the conversion of their skill in this way on an investment probably of not more than $10,000. Obtaining samples of their productions from the various artisans so employed, they hurried home but the best, and see that they are properly attended to

THE report, received at St. Paul, on the 11th, that Gen. Miles had been surrounded and captured by a body of Hostiles, indicates turns out to have been unfounded, the facts being exactly the reverse. On the 4th, inst., with twenty-seven men and thirty-five friendly Crow Indians, started to attack what the Bannock hostiles in the pass in the National Park. We fought after a desperate fight, of about two hours' duration, captured thirty-four Bannocks, women and children—and about one hundred horses. Capt. Bennett, a French scout, and one Crow Indian were killed on the side of the troops, and thirteen Bannock Indians were slain. No more than three or four Bannocks escaped capture.

A CIRCULAR was issued from the United States Treasury Department, on the 11th, postponing the execution of all previous orders limiting the exchange of standard silver dollars for United States notes. The reason assigned was that the Secretary had been informed that such exchange was a substantial resumption of specie payments, and that he had no authority to suspend the required Legal Tender for such resumption. The further announcement was made that silver dollars would be paid out for coin obligations and for coupons currently demands upon the Treasury.

A SEVERE storm swept over Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and other Eastern States, beginning on the 10th and reaching its climax on the night of the 12th. Many miles of the bridges on the trunk lines were swept away, and several lives were lost. In the vicinity of Meadville, Pa., the storm was particularly severe, and great damage was done. About three miles from that city a train ran into a culvert which had washed out, and six persons were drowned. The Welland Canal was also badly damaged, and vessels cannot pass from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario for some weeks.

A CIRCULAR was issued, on the 16th, by the United States Treasury, stating that for the present 300 National Banks, "depositaries of the United States," will be assigned by the Treasury, upon their application, with standard silver dollars from the mint, free of expense, in accordance with Section 3587, Rev. Stat., It is expected that the coin furnished will be kept in circulation by being furnished to public disbursing officers, to manufacturing and other establishments, to other banks and bankers in distribution in the manner by them, and generally where it is to be used as currency money.

THE Secretary of the Treasury, on the 16th, issued the seventh call for the redemption of $5,000,000 of 5-20 bonds of 1865 —$2,000,000 coupon and $3,000,000 registered. The principal and interest will be paid on and after Dec. 16, interest to cease on that day.

AMONG other sad cases reported, on the 11th, was that of the family of Charles Baillie of Vicksburg, Mr. B. had taken his boat to Haines' Bluff, and there buried two children. He had since died, and the body was lying unburied on the floor of a negro cabin; his wife and five children were all sick, and had been taken to Vicksburg.

THE editor of the Cairo (Ill.) Bulletin (Tom Nally) died, in that city, on the 12th, of yellow fever, and like Mulkey, employed on the same paper, was very low with the disease. No other cases were reported. The Bulletin had suspended publication, and people were leaving the city. The weather was cool for that latitude.

THE Governor of Mississippi issued a proclamation, on the 13th, designating the 30th of September as a day of prayer throughout the state to tend for His interposition in behalf of the suffering people—"that He will withdraw from our people the terrible affliction, and that, in His infinite goodness and mercy, He will restore them to health and bring peace to the mourning households." SPECIAL dispatches from Grand Junction, Tenn., and Hickman, Ky., on the 14th, gave a discouraging account of affairs in those two towns. There were only six whites in the place, of whom two were sick. The Grand Manor had said, clearly, that he was satisfied all must die. General despair prevailed in Hickman, and on behalf of the people, a call to utter annihilation and a shelling out from earth." There had been twelve deaths and eight new cases within the previous twenty-four hours.

A BOY who came to Cairo, sick, on the 11th, died, on the 15th, its symptoms before and after fever. Four children of the Bulletin office, who were taken sick, on the 13th, were very low with the same symptoms as exhibited in the cases of those who died on the 12th.

ONLY SEVENTEEN deaths in Memphis, on the 16th; seventy-three in New Orleans; twenty-three in Vicksburg, six in Grenada, and one at Mound City, constitutes all the report of the Bulletin employed who were taken sick on the 15th. The falsehen in other localities of the infected district were of about the average number. OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Oct. 4, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

There is nothing, thinks Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, the champion theological summersault and trapeze performer of Brooklyn, like posting one's self for a roughly on subjects upon which one is to be called upon to speak. Especially is it indispensable, in his estimation, for a minister of the gospel to know the ways of sin from A to izzard, to follow Satan boldly into his visible as well as his invisible strongholds; in short, to tackle Old Nick upon his own dunghill. Full of these great truths the impassioned exhorter lately neared the ce spersion of two non clerical friends and the convoy of a policeman (probably as a guarantee to the scoffing world that his intentions were honorable) and thereupon made a night of it among the most disreputable gin-mills and dance houses of New York city. It is to be presumed that the parson "saw the elephant" frank, tusks and tail, for he has since expressed himself to several newspaper reporters as being chock full of holy horror and burning with impatience to preach a sermon to young men which shall spread terror and destruction among the cohorts of the enemy.

Now all this desire to do good to his flock is highly commendable, but it seems seriously questionable whether the old maxim to the effect that the end justifies the means, can safely be subjected to such a strain as Mr. Talmage brings upon it. An old New Yorker like himself can certainly learn enough about such places for preaching purposes without putting the indignity upon his office of being seen in such company. His example is unfortunately likely to have more effect upon young men than his precepts, for they will be very apt to argue that if it is right for a minister to visit such resorts to inform himself about their doings, it certainly cannot be wrong for them to follow in his footsteps for the same purpose. Mr. Talmage underbridged Means well, but his tendencies toward sensationalism and his craving for notoriety sometimes involve him in violations both of good morals and good taste.

For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain the heathen Chinee isn't a circumstance to the average city tramp. Given good health and an early start, and the professional beggar will cover more ground in ingenious statement—otherwise lies—in a day than the untutored mind before mentioned could accumulate during an industrious week. There is always a refreshing change in the daily tale of the practitioner of mendicity that greets you in your office one morning with his arm slung up and a patch of unsightly eczema on his cheek. He had a fall from the top of a nine story building, while honorably employed at his legitimate trade—bricklaying. He pictures his seven small children at home in different stages of all known diseases, which his wife and youngest are unable to secure nourishment.

You mildly suggest a suspicion of bad whiskey in his breath and he indignantly points to the bandage on his cheek as being the lurking place of the pungent odor—a medical preparation. So much is his manner and so unanswerable his argument, that you divide with him your small store of pennies. But the next day you feel an incomfortable smallness creeping over you when this same man of reckless statement with both arms free and with smiles upon two unclouded cheeks, stands upon a corner and holds out a pleading hand. To-day he is immovable, as a glance at his bandaged legs shows, and his story includes a motherless home and a startling increase in the number of juvenile dependants. Still again, the next day, he is fresh from the hospital with the same odor of medical (?) preparation clinging to every fold of his ventilated garment. And so this protean individual wanders through life complaining of the "cheap labor" of the Chinese but too well satisfied with customary existence to lift his finger to help it out of Hoyt's trap.

The junk is his bed room and the drinking fountain his bath and laundry. During the summer his wants are easily met, but when he is driven to cover by frost he often drifts into court and is supplied with food and lodging for the winter at government expense. But the edge is taken off our sympathy when we learn that it is an open question whether or not the petty larceny which secured these free luxuries, was not committed for this very end. Truly the heathen Chinee must wake up.

The forty seventh annual exhibition of the American Institute is now open and shows an unusually large proportion of artistic work in all departments.

In the early history of this country the people separated by months of time, from Europe, were dependant upon themselves for many things, and their tastes were comparatively simple. As we became rich, wealth sought an outlet in display, and then came what might be called the barbaric stage of taste. We hung ponderous watchchains to our vests, lighted up our shirt fronts with diamonds in broad day light and our fair sex swept our streets with costly silks and satins such as are not worn in other countries save at evening in the reception room. As for the decoration of our houses the barbaric age showed equal invention. Our drawing rooms blazed with gilding, and what can recollect without a shudder, the hideous mantel and other ornaments, called by courtesy objects of art, and charitably credited with a Parisian origin, which were at once the pride and delight of their possessors. Of late years the American took to travelling, he saw what was good in the old world, and the result is another revolution in popular taste.

RADIX.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the nerves of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheever, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been sold away for by its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

OBSERVATIONS.

1st. The State-bank circulation in 1862 was $202,005,767.00. The greatest reduction in 1863 was $202,005,767.00.

2d. The above tables are official and give the whole currency circulation, including Treasury notes, State-bank notes, fractional currency, time notes, demand notes, legal-tender notes, compound interest and National-bank notes.

3d. It will be seen that at two periods, 1865 and 1874, did the purchasing power of the currency exceed its present power, and in 1865 only for a brief period, during an extraordinary disbursement to pay off the army; and then only in the small sum of $7,730,783.15, and in 1874, the year following the great panic, which has been erroneously charged to contraction.

4th. Specie resumption would add the two hundred millions of Government coin to the circulating currency; thus giving, with the private hoardings that would be let loose, a circulating medium exceeding by more than $200,000,000 the currency at any other period in the history of the country.

5th. In the year 1870, which was prosperous, the nominal value of the currency was $700,375,899 48, the coin value of which was $509,021,709 95. The circulation exactly now is $70,597,899 96, the coin value equivalent of which is $69,646,788 76 in 1878—the year of the panic—and in $81,486,916 17 in 1879; then the panic occurred on an increased circulation of $100,000,000, and continued under an increase of more than $80,000,000. In it not then apparent that the panic was not caused by contraction? Is it not equally apparent that its effects would not be offered by an amendable inflation? Is it not better to preserve coin payment, and thus secure a healthy inflation of $2,000,000 per month? This would carry the purchasing value to near $700,000,000, or within $100,000,000 of the value of the highest circulation attained during the war, and greater by nearly $200,000,000 in real value than $1,357 other periods.

6th. The steady and almost uniform depreciation of the currency, as the volume was increased, affords incontestible proof that, beyond the ordinary demands of business, a paper circulation cannot be maintained with advantage to the country, and that its increase beyond such business demands does not add to its purchasing power or real value.

7th. It cannot be doubted that the Government circulating note or greenback affords a satisfactory currency; and it is equally certain that the nearer the value of such note approaches a coin standard, the more satisfactory it is to the people. It should be the equivalent of coin and interchangeable with coin at the will of the holder, and receivable for all public and private dues. The rate demands of the business interests of the country; beyond that it cannot be made to promote the general prosperity.

8th. There has been since 1866 only a very trifling contraction in the currency, taken at its face value. In that year the whole currency circulation was $720,412,092 75. It is now at face value, $688,597,375 27, showing a diminution in nominal value of only $31,814,717 48. The real value of the currency in 1866 was $50,099,294 32, the present real value or power of the currency is $18,131,682 82, thus exceeding the purchasing power in 1866 by the sum of $18,032,387.50; showing that, in the last ten years, the appreciation of currency has compensated for the contraction and $147,041 82 more—its business power being greater in the sum than it was in 1866.

9th. Very nearly the whole apparent difference between the power circulation in 1866 and 1878 is accounted for by the withdrawal of fractional currency, for which substantially silver coin has been substituted, but which is not included in the foregoing table. Add the subsidiary silver circulation to the foregoing currency outstanding and the difference face value between 1866 and 1878 will be less than three millions of dollars, while the purchasing power of the currency at the present time will exceed that of 1866 by more than $100,000,000.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Oct. 4, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

There is nothing, thinks Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, the champion theological summersault and trapeze performer of Brooklyn, like posting one's self thoroughly on subjects upon which one is to be called upon to speak. Especially is it indispensable, in his estimation, for a minister of the gospel to know the ways of sin from A to Izzard, to follow Satan boldly into his visible as well as his invisible strongholds; in short, to tackle Old Nick upon his own dunghill. Full of these great truths the impassioned exhorter lately secured the co-operation of two non-clerical friends and the convoy of a policeman (probably as a guarantee to the scolding world that his intentions were honorable) and thereupon made a night of it among the most disreputable gin-mills and dance houses of New York city. It is to be presumed that the parson "saw the elephant" (rank, tusks and tail, for he has since expressed himself to several newspaper reporters as being chock full of long horror and burning with inspiration to preach a sermon to young men which shall spread terror and destruction among the cohorts of the enemy.

Now all this desire to do good to his flock is highly commendable, but it seems seriously questionable whether the old maxim to the effect that the end justifies the means, can safely be subjected to such a strain as Mr. Talmage brings upon it. An old New Yorker like himself can certainly learn enough about such places for preaching purposes without putting the indignity upon his office of being seen in such company. His example is unfortunately likely to have more effect upon young men than his precepts, for they will be very apt to argue that if it is right for a minister to visit such resorts to inform himself about their doings, it certainly cannot be wrong for them to follow in his footsteps for the same purpose. Mr. Talmage undoubtedly Means well, but his tendencies toward sensationalism and his craving for notoriety sometimes involve him in violations both of good morals and good taste.

For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain the heathen Chinee isn't a circumstance to the average city tramp. Given good health and an early start, and the professional beggar will cover more ground in ingenious statement—other ways lies—in a day than the oriental before mentioned could accumulate during an industrious week. There is always a rewarding chance in the daily talk of the penniless man. He greets you in your office one morning with his arm slung up and a patch of unearthly size on his cheek. He had a fall from the top of a nine story building, while literally employed at his legitimate trade—bricklaying. He pictures his seven small children at home in different stages of all known diseases, which his wife and youngest are unable to secure nourishment.

You mildly suggest a suspicion of bad whiskey in his breath and he indignantly points to the bandage on his cheek as being the lurking place of the pungent odor—a medical preparation. So much is his manner and so unanswerable his argument, that you divide with him your small store of pennies. But the next day you find an uncomfortable small mess creeping over you which this same man of reckless statement with both arms free and with smiles upon two unclouded cheeks, stands upon a corner and holds out a pleading hand. To-day he is immovable, as a glance at his bandaged legs shows, and his story includes a motherless home and a startling increase in the number of juvenile dependants. Still again, the next day, he is fresh from the hospital with the same odor of medical (?) preparation clinging to every fold of his ventilated garments. And so this protean individual wanders through life complaining of the "cheap labor" of the Chinese but too well satisfied with clemosynary existance to lift his finger to an honest honest's toil.

The park is his bed room and the drinking fountain his bath and laundry. During the summer his wants are easily met, but when he is driven to cover by frost he often drifts into court and is supplied with food and lodging for the winter at government expense. But the edge is taken off our sympathy when we learn that it is an open question whether or not the petty larceny which secured them free lunories, was not committed for this very end. Truly the heathen Chinee must wake up

The forty seventh annual exhibition of the American institute is now open and shows an unusually large proportion of artistic work in all departments.

In the early history of this country the people separates by months of time from Europe, were dependent upon themselves for many things, and their tastes were comparatively simple. As we became rich, wealth sought an outlet in display, and then came what might be called the barbaric stage of taste. We hung ponderous watchchains to our vests, lighted up our shirt fronts with diamonds in broad day light and our fair sex swept our streets with costly silks and satins such as are not worn in other countries save at evening in the reception room. As for the decoration of our houses the barbaric age showed equal invention. Our drawing rooms blazed with gilding, and who can recollect without a shudder, the hideous mantes and other ornaments, called by courtesy objects of art, and charitably credited with a Parisian origin, which were at once the pride and delight of their possessors. Of late years the American took to travelling, he saw what was good in the old world, and the result is another revolution in popular taste.

RADIX.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheetham, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

By No Means a Laughing Matter.—The Yellow-Fever Horror in Memphis.

Memphis people visiting Boston laugh at the papers of the panic which the Yaws raised there two years South. They say things are not nearly so bad.

The above, from a Boston paper, was sent to one of the telegraph operators employed here by the Western Union Telegraph Company, and by Mr. Creston, the local agent of the Western Associated Press, to whom he gave it, was handed to us. We would give worlds, had we them to give, to know the names of the Memphians, who, absenting themselves from their home from fear of the fever, mock at the pangs and sufferings of 3,000 sick, laugh over the twelve hundred dead men, women and children who sleep in Elmwood and Calvary Cemeteries, and Potter's field, and deride the needy widows and orphans, and hungry, unemployed laborers, who clamor for the food doled out to them day by day, the charity, not of Memphis people, who enjoy Boston and laugh over the press reports, but, thank God! of millions who never met any Memphians, but who are moved by the plain, simple, unvarnished statements of Mr. Canon, who, to our knowledge, has always been under rather than over the mark. Memphis people visiting Boston may laugh, but we, who are here, are daily, hourly in tears for the manly men and saintly women, many of whom might have fled, but who preferred to share the fate of their humbler fellow-citizens, and have fallen in the cause of humanity. But there must be some mistake about it. Surely there is not one of all the thousands of Memphians who are safe from the pestilence that takes its hundreds per day or more, who would laugh over the reports, even though they were exaggerated, which they are not. Surely there is not one so lost to shame, to the commonest decency, as to laugh while all the world is sorrow over our sorrow, and the open hand of charity ministers to our wants from all parts of the earth. Only some over 3,000 men, women and children in a twenty-seven days, out of a population of 15,000, white and black, and to be expecting over $10,000 for 1,200 horses and forty doctors, and for medicines and food for more than 3,000 sick and 10,000 indigent, is to us a sad reality, enough to move even a stone to tears. But, beside this, there are the tales of individual sorrow, of whole families swept away in a week, leaving not even one of the name; of nurses dying at their posts, of priests and ministers, and good sisters following those they succored so fast as to appal the stoutest heart, and "give us pause" amid the general wreck and ruin. No pen can do these scenes and sights justice; no tongue exaggerate them. Lisping childhood, hoary and venerable old age, the vagrant and the merchant, the man of God and the unbeliever, all are taken, all claimed alike by the awful pestilence. It thins all ranks, and brings sorrow to the mansion, the cottage and the cabin. The cry of the fatherless is heard every hour, claiming the pity, the sympathy and the tears of the most hardened veteran. In this office, as we write, there are but two left of all who a month ago were employed in the editorial, counting and composing rooms, and our pressman is down with the fever. Strangers to the office, as to the business, are standing to our aid as fairs while the only editor left on duty alternates, through sixteen hours a day, between his desk and a case. This is our personal measure of the dreadful epidemic, and surely it is a sad one. It has moved us to tears more a time the past ten days, although we are not used to the melting mood. Our experience is one we will never forget, and it is a common one. The fifth epidemic we have passed through, this surpasses them all in the horrors it has uncovered. Parents have deserted children, and children parents, husbands their wives; and not one wife a husband. Men have dropped dead on the streets, while others have died neglected, only to be discovered by the death-spreading gases from their bodies. Little children, clamoring for the food she could no longer give, have appealed to the dead mother, who gave up her spirit as she gave death to her babe, in agony of the fever. Ministers of the Gospel, carrying messages of peace, hurrying from home to home, have had their weary feet arrested and their work stayed by the pestilence, that walks in the noonday as at night. The priest administering the extreme unction, and the bride of Christ, wiping the death-damp from the forehead of those whose friends and kindols are far away, are almost paralyzed in the sacred act, and die even before we know they are sick. The business of the hour is the sexton of the sick, the burial of the dead and the care of the needy living. The last words of those who are not in sight fare wells to the dead, and the first in the morning, "Who lives and who has died?" All day, and every hour of the day, this question is repeated, and the heart sickens at the report, and the soul grows weary over the repetition. And yet there is no relief nor any release. Worse and worse the epidemic has grown, until to-day it has capped the climax, and the hearts of the brave men who have stood in the breach are disabled with fear, with a dread that annihilation awaits us, and that we are destined to be blotted from the earth. Four sits on every face and dread on every heart. We work, not in the shadow but in the very face of death. We meet him on every hand and at every moment in the names of his victims and in the desolation he has spread around us. Hope we have none. We are appalled. Courage? Determination, despair of any relief, but we are nerved for the call. We pray blessings upon the generous who have helped us in all the States; we pray for the safety of those who have come among us to nurse the sick and minister to the dying, and we ask that the names of the women and the men who have laid down their lives for us shall be handed down forever as among the brightest and the best of earth.—Memphis Appeal.

Sir John Lubbock on Ants.

The following is part of a paper on ants recently read by Sir John Lubbock before the British Association:

"Sir John Lubbock said that he had been for some years watching the habits of ants and had kept under observation about thirty species. Though living in captivity they were in good health, and he had in one nest a queen which had lived with him since 1874. He could confirm the statements which had been made with respect to the architectural skill of ants, their attention to their young, their remarkable organization, their possession of domestic animals, and even the institution of slavery. He had also watched several other insects which lived in association with them, of which M. Andre calculated that there were 583 species. In some cases the association was undoubtedly, in others it was because the nests afforded shelter to other insects, and there were also some unwelcome hospitable companions which attached themselves to ants and could not be got rid of.

"The common house ant was to be found sometimes in association with other ants, but the cases were exceptional, and he had never seen any instance. A nearly-allied species, however, the sanguinea, was sometimes found in association with others, generally the fusca. In such cases the nest belonged to the sanguinea. The queen and the young were of that species, and the fuscas were slaves, though free to come and go, as there was no fugitive slave law, and they seemed to be quite reconciled to their position. They assisted in the household duties, and in foraging for provisions. They kept the aphides in coitz, and derived a considerable share of their sustenance from them. In the winter, when they were of no use, they were still tended with great care, until the spring, when they became again useful—an instance of prudence and forethought unexampled in the animal kingdom. There was one species which took no part whatever in the duties of the household, and would even starve in the midst of plenty if the food were not put into their mouths. He had confirmed Huber's remarkable experiments on this point, and had kept some alive and in health for months by allowing them a slave for an hour or two a day to feed and clean them.

"To test their intelligence he suspended some honey about half an inch over the nest, which could only be reached by a paper bridge ten feet long. He then made a small heap of earth the which they could reach it. They soon swarmed over the earth and began to remove it grain by grain. Some of the earth it never occurred to them to heap it up again, though they tried to stretch up to the honey, and then went round by the bridge. He made a similar experiment by placing honey which could only be reached by crossing a stream over which he had placed a bridge, a bit of straw. He slightly moved the bridge, and they tried in vain to stretch over, but never thought of putting the straw back, which they could easily have done. Every one knew that it an ant or bee found a store of honey, edges would soon gather about it; but very little intelligence was employed if the ants and bees only accompanied their friends. The case was different if they could describe the locality and send their friends to it. They did not appear to be able to communicate signals of this kind to their friends. If a fusca's nest was disturbed and one of them found a place of concealment, she was conscious that her friends should come to it. She went up to one of them and took it by the mandible. The second ant rolled herself up in a ball and was carried over her shoulder to the place. The second ant then went to a third and the process was repeated.

"He put an ant which had been without food for some days to honey, and saw that after feeding she was on her way to the nest when she met some friends, whom she fed, and then returned alone to the honey. On her way back she met some other friends, whom she fed, and then five of them went back with her to the honey. In the course they, no doubt, brought others. He believed they were able to distinguish between a large and a small quantity. To test this he put some of the Lucanus Niger species into a small store and others into a large one, and, having watched for fifty hours found that the ants with the small quantity brought eighty-two friends to share it, and the ants with the large store brought two hundred and fifty-seven. To try whether they could send their friends to a store, he put an ant (Niger) to some honey, which he placed near her nest. She fed, returned to the nest, and came out with ten friends. He took her up, however, and put her into the honey and her friends then wandered about and then returned to the nest."

There are two kinds of things at which a man should never get angry—what a man cannot help and what he can.

Mamma's Grave.

A boy, not over eleven years old, whose pinched face betrayed hunger, and whose clothing could scarcely be called by the name, dropped into a carpenter shop on Grand River avenue the other day, and after much hesitation explained to the foreman:

"We want to get a grave-board for ma. She died last winter, and the graves are so thick that we can't hardly find here no more. We went up last Sunday, and we come awful near not finding it. We thought we'd git a grave-board, so we wouldn't lose the grave. When we thought we'd lost it Jack he cried, and Bud she cried, and my chin trembled so I could hardly talk."

"Where is your father?" asked the carpenter.

"Oh, he's home, but he never goes up there with us, and we don't tell him about the board. I guess he hates ma, for he wasn't home when she died, and he wouldn't buy no coffin nor notice. Sometimes, when we are sittin' on the door-step talking about her, and Jack and Bud are cryin', and I'm rememberin', how she kissed us all before she died, he says we'd better quit that or we'll get what's bad for us. But we sleep up stairs, and we talk and cry in the dark a spell, and want to. How much will the board be?"

The carpenter selected something fit for the purpose, and asked:

"Who will put it up at the grave?"

"We'll take it up on our cart," replied the boy, "and I guess the graves yard man will help put it up."

"You want the name painted on, don't you?"

"Yes, sir, we want the board white, and then we want you to paint on that that she was our ma, and that she was forty-one years old, and that she died the second of November, and that she's gone to Heaven, and that she was one of the best mothers ever was, and that we are going to be good all our lives and go on where she is when we die. How much will it all cost, sir?"

"How much have you got?"

"Well," said the boy, as he brought out a little calico bag and emptied its contents on the bench, "Bud dragged the fairy for the women next door and earned twenty cents; Jack, he worked in the garden and earned forty cents, and he found five cents in the road; I run errands and nuzzled-us and fixed up a boy's cart and helped carry some apples into a store, and I earned sixty-five cents. All that makes a hundred and thirty cents, sir, and pa don't know we've got it, 'cause we kept it hid in the ground, under a stone."

The carpenter meant to be liberal, but he said:

"A grave-board will cost at least three dollars."

The lad looked from his little store of metals to the carpenter and back, realized how many weary weeks had passed since the first penny was earned and saved, and suddenly wailed out:

"Then we can't never have our boy one, and mother's grave will get lost."

But he left the shop with tears of gladness in his eyes, and when he returned, yesterday, little Bud and Jack were with him, and they had a cart. There was not only a head-board, but a foot-board, and the carpenter and painter and carpenter had done their work with full hearts and done it well.

"Ain't it awful nice—nicer than rich folks have!" whispered the children, as the boards were being placed on the cart. "Won't the grave look nice, though, and won't ma be awful glad!"

Ere this the mother's grave has been found, and when night comes the three motherless ones will cuddle close together and whisper their gratitude that it cannot be lost to them even in the storms and drifts of winter.—Detroit Free Press.

Fall Fashions.

The earliest importations of fall wraps show sleeves as part of cloth for garments for general wear, and mantles for dressy wrap. The new loosely-woven cloths called coatings, containing several colors blended in one, will be made into cut-away coats for early fall weather, and very stylish trimmed with rich passementerie and fringe. Black will be chosen for mantles; black, steel gray and dark blue will be the colors used. The trimmings will be mavenbont passementeries as fluffy as feathers, yet made of silk and sometimes brightened by beads or ornamented with tiny pendant drops, balls and tassels. These will form the headings for plaited laces and for the new fashion fringes of crimped loops weaved in spiral shapes like so many small curls or screws.

Merchants differ about the use of beads. They all think fine jet will be worn again, but more carefully than of late, but they differ about retaining the rainbow and garnet beads. Very handsome inlaid buttons are being imported in colors to match costumes. Very small jet buttons will be sold by the gross for trimming a single dress of black silk or of wool.

Heavy square shawls for early fall use have the smooth center of black, brown or gray, with a broad homrette or other rough-figured border in which appear the gay colors of India cashmeres. Others are all of one color, and are finished with handsomely plaited fringe, and on some the deep fringe is in bright Scotch plaid colors. The reversible shawls, different on each side, are very thick and warm. Striped shawls have richly shaded borders. The traveling shawls, long, fine and soft, are in clan tartans, and are most liked in combinations of green and blue.

Intricately beaded Persian cords and designs are brought out in the new brocaded silks for fall. The colors are very rich and dark for the background, and are brilliantly lighted with pale tints of yellow blue and rose. Cream, which is very dark garnet, is the favorite color for the ground, and in almost every piece shown there are dots, threads, and sometimes leaves of the latest shades of flax; there is also a great deal of bronze shading, of old gold, and of prune color. These fabrics are to make stately dresses for dinner parties and for the house.

For wedding dresses are white velvet brocades on satin grounds of the richest qualities. The velvet flowers are of deep moss pile, and suggest white moss-roses. For evening dresses is white satin brocaded with a small figure in colors, such as pink roses, pale colored ostrich plumes, or pale blue palm leaves.

Silks for lower skirts of broaded costumes have inch-wide satin stripes of self-color, or else of shaded tints to match the grounds of the brocades.

Plaid silks are imported for trimming the Tam's short walking dresses are of dark grave colors, arranged in what merchants call fancy plaids—meaning that they belong to no special clan. These will probably be most popular here, but Parisiennes have a caprice this season for wearing the tartan and Scotch clan tartans that Worth has been making all summer for Exposition dresses. In these tartans every color bar and color follows a design that has been in use for generations, and which is never varied. The tartans that are most used in Parisare the Forty-second, with its combination of blue and green, the Argyll plaid, the gay MacKenzie tartan, with lines of red and yellow amid the blue and green, the Forbes, the Malcolm and the Macleod. In the plaited waists and kilt skirts of short suits these plaids are displayed in most effective ways; sometimes a certain bright part of each plaid is brought out on top of each kilt plait, or in single broad square forms the yoke, the collar or the pocket of the dress. The only trimmings are buttons and pipings. Flat gilt buttons the color of the tartan, Etruscan gold, and engraved like pure gold, are used on plaid dresses. The belts are of the same, rather too wide to be becoming to the figure—and are fastened by square gilt buckles.

The merchants who have returned from Paris are unanimous on one matter at least: they all speak with enthusiasm of the short walking-dress, and of the perfect success it is being in all countries. All that makes a hundred and thirty cents, sir, and pa don't know we've got it, 'cause we kept it hid in the ground, under a stone."

A Prairie Duel.

Some five years ago Adam Goldie left his native County of Shannon, Mo., where he is engaged in cattle raising, for Northern Texas, where he passed two years, and there one of the most exciting incidents of his career happened. His fame as a duelist secured for Indies' short walking dresses are of dark grave colors, arranged in what merchants call fancy plaids—meaning that they belong to no special clan. General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

SIMONS, the Italian, who, some months ago, murdered Nicholas McCue, in the streets of Chicago, was arraigned in the Criminal Court of that city, on the 19th, and, to the surprise of all except his counsel, entered the plea of guilty. The punishment for his admitted crime must be either hanging or imprisonment for life, at the discretion of the presiding Judge.

On the 17th, the reunion of the Twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry (better known as "President Hayes' Regiment") occurred at Willoughby, and over 10,000 people were present. President Hayes and family, Gen. Hastings and other distinguished personages were in attendance. A short and pleasant speech by President Hayes (who was presiding officer of the day) in response to the welcoming address by Mayor Ellis, was loudly applauded.

A SCHOOL-DISTRICT election was held in New Haven, Conn., on the 16th, the issue being the re-establishing of devotional exercises in the public schools. The ticket favoring such re-establishment was successful by 2,000 majority. The Catholics voted with the Protestants.

AT Baltimore, on the 17th, the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, in session in that city, elected John B. Harmon, of California, Grand Sire, and Mr. Glenn, of Georgia, Deputy Grand Sire. The other officers were re-elected. An amendment was adopted changing the title of the supreme body from "Grand Lodge of the United States," to that of "Grand Lodge of Independent Order of Odd-Fellows."

On the 21st, the United States Treasury disbursed 30,000 silver dollars. Since the order of Sec'y Sherman, revoking the previous order for the general issue of silver coin for greenbacks, the daily issue had been about $50,000. The Treasury held, on the 21st, $340,913,880 in United States bonds to secure National Bank circulation; $13,758,400 in bonds to secure public deposits, and $5,378,100 to secure subscriptions to 4-per-cent. loans.

IT was reported from Washington, on the 23d, that the labor agitators there triumphantly claimed to have brought about an order which had been issued giving laborers at the Navy Yard a full day's pay for eight hours work, and a full day and a quarter for ten hours' work. Similar orders had been issued to apply to workmen on Government buildings in that city, and the rate of pay for laborers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing had been raised from a dollar to a dollar and a quarter a day. Judge Snell decided that the meetings and processions held by Cohen and his followers were riotous and disorderly. Orders had been issued to the police, and were being enforced, to prevent any further meetings or demonstrations of the kind.

THE Union Dime Savings Bank of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., has closed its doors, with liabilities amounting to $150,000. The announcement is made that all depositors will be paid in full.

GEN. SHERIDAN received a dispatch, on the 23d, from Gen. Miles, at Fort Keogh, in Montana Territory, stating that six Sioux Indians had just reached that post direct from the British Provinces, and had presented to the bearers of a message from Sitting Bull, asking upon what terms he and his people would be allowed to surrender to the United States military authorities.

THE Odd-Fellows' Bank at Sacramento, Cal., has made an assignment.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

IT was reported from the infected regions, on the 23d, that the fever was spreading in the country adjacent to the cities suffering from the plague, and considerable uneasiness and alarm were expected in the minds of the people who had previously reason to hope they might escape the contagion. Particularly so in the ocean or inland seaside towns along the railroads leading out of Memphis. The President of the Baptist Relief Committee of Memphis had issued a circular to the Baptist friends throughout the Union, returning thanks for the generous aid extended them, and saying that they had enough of money and supplies, but asking for a continuance of prayers sympathy. The deaths in Memphis during the twenty-four hours ending at noon, on the 22d, numbered sixty-four; in New Orleans, forty; at Brickman, Ky., four; at Canton, Miss., six; at Grand Junction, Tenn., three.

THERE were 134 new cases reported in New Orleans, on the 23d; deaths forty-four. The total cases to that date were 7,072, and deaths, 2,514. The disease was evidently abating.

THE fever was still raging without abatement at Canton, Miss., on the 23d; new cases, twenty-three, and one death. A telegram from Martin, Tenn., says the condition of affairs in that town was deplorable from the absence of any organized system of relief. Several citizens were down with the fever. Ten new cases and four deaths were reported at Hickman, Ky.

THERE were fifteen new cases and five deaths at Holly Springs, Miss., on the 23d, and more physicians and nurses were needed. The disease there was on the increase. Additional help was also called for from several other towns in Louisiana and Mississippi.

THERE were seven deaths in Vicksburg on the 23d. The fever had decreased so much there that physicians and nurses were leaving for other points.

OVER $300,000 had been collected in New York City up to the 23d for the yellow-fever sufferers. The amount in St. Louis was over $70,000 and in Chicago over $80,000, with corresponding amounts in other cities and towns.

THE hope was entertained, in Memphis, on the 24th, that the fever had been stayed; but this hope was dissolved by the reports on the 25th. A great demand for nurses had again sprung up, and the deaths for twenty-four hours, ending at six p. m. numbered sixty-four. Cries of distress continued to come in from the surrounding country. In some instances, in the suburbs, it was discovered, by physicians of the Howard Association, that whole families had been sick for several days, without being cared for by either physicians or nurses. The number of new cases reported on the 25th was 156. The population in the city was estimated at 8,000.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Connecticut Democratic State Convention was held at New Haven, on the 17th, and the present State officers were nominated for re-election, headed by Rebert D. Hubbard for Governor. Lieut.-Gov. Loomis declined a renomination and Charles Durand, of Derby, was selected in his stead. The platform adopted condemns all repudiation and demands an honest and just payment of the public debt; that gold and silver are recognized by the Constitution as the standard money of the Union, and constitute the most stable basis for the commercial necessities of the world; that the Resumption act was not passed in haste, and was unwise at the time of its passage, but the Representatives of the State in Congress are reified upon to exercise wise judgment in their action upon the question of resumption at this time.

A STATE Democratic Convention was held in Worchester, Mass., on the 17th. The Convention was largely composed of delegates acting in the interest of Gen. Butler for Governor, and these had taken the precaution to secure all the halls in the city, so that when the trouble came, the dissatisfied ones could find no place for meeting. The State Central Committee, who were opposed to Butler, seeing that his nomination was inevitable, therefore declined an adjournment to Faneuil Hall, Boston, and fixed the time for holding the Convention on the 25th of September. Mr. Butler's friends thereupon organized by the selection of Hon. Richard I. Bradford as Permanent Chairman, and placed the following ticket in nomination: Governor, Benjamin F. Butler; Lieutenant-Governor, John F. Arnold; Secretary of State, Charles M. Strauss; Attorney-General, Caleb Cushing; Auditor, J. Boyle O'Reilly; Treasurer, D. N. Skillings. The platform adopted reiterates the allusion of the Massachusetts Democracy to old-time Democratic principles; condemns the prevailing extravagance in the Administration of State and National affairs; favors the reservation of the public domain for actual settlers; condemns the fraud by which President Hayes was declared elected; declares the Republican party immeasurably corrupt; indorses the platform adopted in 1875; deprecates the placing of restrictions in the way of exercising the right of suffrage, etc., etc.

THERE being no choice for Governor in Maine (the Constitution requiring a clear majority over all opposing candidates), the duty of selecting a Governor will devolve upon the Legislature which meets in January next. The process is for the House of Representatives to select two persons by ballot from those who were voted for at the popular election, and certify their names to the Senate, by which body one of the two is declared Governor.

THE Republicans of the First New Jersey District have nominated Hon. George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy under President Grant, for Congress.

THE Democratic members of the Oregon Legislature have elected J. H. Slater, to succeed Mr. Mitchell in the United States Senate. In a recent interview, Mr. Slater said he is not in sympathy with inflation. He advocates the substitution of legal-tenders for National Bank notes, opposes fiat money and demands that currency shall be on a coin basis.

THE Massachusetts Republicans met at Worcester, in State Convention, on the 19th, and placed in nomination the following ticket: Governor, Hon. Thomas Talbot; Lieutenant-Governor, John D. Long; Secretary of State, Henry L. Pierce; Treasurer, Charles Endicott; Auditor, the present incumbent; Attorney-General, George Marston. The resolutions congratulate the State and Nation on prosperity, strongly advise this course.

THE Special Congregation of Cardinals has decided that the Pope should not leave the Vatican unless under special overruling circumstances.

MONTENEGRO has invited Servia to join with her in resisting the Albanians. It is said that Gen. Rouzoufl, the Russian Commander, strongly advises this course.

VIENNA dispatches of the 19th report a rising of the Croatian Christians.

THE Provisional Government of Bulgaria has been instructed by the Russians to summon all male inhabitants between the ages of twenty and twenty-two years to form a territorial army of fifty battalions of infantry and twenty squadrons of cavalry.

THE King of Burmah, in India, is dead.

AN uneasy feeling prevailed in London, on the 20th, over the prospective outcome of Lord Beaconsfield's Indian policy. A war with Afghanistan was anticipated, and this, it was believed, would reopen the entire Eastern question.

ACCORDING to a Cracow (Poland) telegram of the 20th, many arrests had been made at Odessa and Kischkow, in consequence of the discovery of a plot to liberate the imprisoned Nihilists.

ACCORDING to Calcutta dispatches of the 23d, the Ameer of Afghanistan had positively refused to grant permission for the British Embassy to Cabul to pass through the Khyber Pass, and that the Embassy had been compelled to return to Peshawun.

THE Russian troops have altogether evacuated their long-occupied position at Sanstefano, and have been succeeded by Turkish troops.

CONSTANTINOPLE dispatches of the 21st say that Greek "disasters had passed into Turkey with a view to incite another insurrection in Thessaly and Epirus.

ACCORDING to Bombay (India) dispatches of the 23d, the feeling there over the discontinuance of the Ameer of Afghanistan was exceedingly warlike. A force of 12,000 men had been gathered on the frontier, and the determination was expressed to compel an apology from the Ameer, or occupy the country.

VIENNA dispatches of the 23d report the successful advance of the Austrians against the insurgent position in Northeastern Bosnia. The rebel position near Seniedrolres had been captured, two days before, after a battle lasting six hours. The Austrian loss was 400 killed and wounded. The Insurgent loss was greater. The Towns of Bellina and Livas had also been captured.

A Husband's Hobby.

Mr. Waite is a model husband—that is to say, in a good many respects. He neither drinks, smokes nor chews, stays home at evenings, never gambles and gives his wife all the money that she wants. It is said that all men have some idiosyncrasy or hobby. Mr. Waite has his. It is a deep-rooted mania for attending auctions and for buying articles of every description, a la Toodles, without regard as to whether they will ever be of any practical or imaginary use to him. As long as he gets them at a bargain, he is satisfied. A good joke about this peculiarity of his was related to me the other evening by a friend of his. Mr. Waite went to an auction sale of a dealer in sporting goods. He bought 200 dime bells at twenty cents a pair and carried them home in triumph. He stored them in the cellar, where they remained for six months or so. Mrs. Waite got tired of seeing them occupying so much space, especially as she wanted the cellar for some purpose of her own. So, imagining that her husband had forgotten all about his novel acquisition, she sold the dime-bells for a mere song to an auctioneer. That evening Mr. Waite returned home with a handcart. His face was flushed but triumphant.

"What have you got in that handcart, my dear?" asked Mrs. Waite.

"Dumb-bells, darling."

"What?"

"Dumb-bells. Bought 200 pairs at thirty cents a pair. Paid more for them than for the others I got, but, you know, it will never do to let the price of dumb-bells drop."

Mrs. Waite took one look at the articles. Her worst fears were realized. They were the same old dumb-bells that she had sold in the morning. Mr. Waite had purchased them at an auction at the sale where they had been offered, and had bought them in at one-third advance over the price he had first paid for them.—Alta Californian.

SOME one has at last discovered the tendency of the average milkman to water his milk. His instinctive desire that his milk shall be pure impels him to wash it carefully before delivering it to his customers, and some of the water is apt to get left in.—Boston Advertiser.

AN old lady, remarkable for her confused ideas of the meaning of words, describes a recent summer evening thus: "It was a beautiful bright night, and the moon made everything as light as a cork."

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Mr. John G. Tappan, the Boston defaulter, who used to be very careful of his personal appearance, now goes about the streets of that city looking very forlorn and old.

—Prof. Collier, chemist of the Agricultural Department, at Washington, is engaged in some very important experiments, to show whether or not sugar can be made from common cornstalks.

—Sir Garnet Wolseley, the British commander now in charge of the island of Cyprus, is first cousin of Mrs. Wakeman, the wife of a physician at Redding, Conn., and corresponds regularly with the family.

—Ex-Gov. English, of New Haven, was elected by a troop, the other day, who begged for an old pair of shoes, and after receiving them returned in an hour or two and asked for twenty cents to pay for getting them mended.

—It is reported that the Western Union Telegraph Company has made a contract with Mr. Edison to pay $6,000 a year for thirty-four years on condition that he will give the company all right, title and interest in his telegraphic inventions.

—It is reported that among the stocks turned over to the Eliot Bank of Boston by R. B. Conant, the late cashier, was $1,000 worth of stock in a mining company of California, which has advanced in price within a few weeks from $2 to $100 a share, more than making up all his previous losses.

—The Paris correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle says that the pecunious millionaire, Michael Reese, who died a few days ago, sealed the fence of the German Cemetery containing the graves of his parents and was brought before the Burgomaster, and that the excitement thereby produced caused his death.

On the banks of the "blue Danuate," in Huntington County, stands the quiet little Town of Alexandria. Years ago, in and about the village lived a man, the terror of the country, and his name was "Lewis, the robber." Many a nightmare lost its grip, and many a wagoner on the old Pittsburgh and Philadelphia Pike was bereft by force of his valuables. Last week two gentlemen went out hunting on Short Mountain, a mile or two west of town. They shot a squirrel, which, wounded, ran into the trunk of a large oak. What was their surprise when, grasping into the hollow trunk for their game, to discover an old Dutch oven full of Spanish doubloons, Mexican dollars, English sovereigns and other coins, all dated previous to the year 1820. Several packages of papers were found which crumbled to dust as soon as touched. Their glittering wealth, which they divided among them, amounted to several thousand dollars. It is supposed that all this wealth was deposited in the tree by "Lewis, the robber."—Altoona (Pa.) Tribune.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL evidence caused the arrest of a Farmington man at Boston, on the other day, and he will owe to good luck his escape from conviction. A workman was sent to a house to make some repairs, and immediately after his departure a valuable gold watch and chain were missing. No one but him and the woman of the house had entered the room containing the jewelry, so far as known; he was charged with the theft, and, though he denied it persistently, was arrested. The owner of the property soon learned, however, that the watch had been removed by her little daughter, and every effort was make to repair the wrong to the imprisoned man. He, however, declined all offers of money or of remuneration, and proposes to have the case go into court and receive his acquittal there.—N. Y. Post.

THE BABY BOYS.

Two little boys I own;
The elder scarcely walks alone;
His sunny hair and laughing brown eyes,
His earnest look of sweet surprise,
His funny ways and joys so dear
I could not tell you all about
If I should try a year.

He creeps so fast to catch his toys,
And then he sets up such a noise!
His horse and dog, and book and bell,
He throws them all about pell-mell,
Oh, Mother Goose! if you could see
This little boy, or half of me.
Your sides would ache, I fear.

In hammock low, among the trees,
Rocked back and forth by passing breeze,
The baby swings and coos to see
The gentle rustle of the trees,
The lights and shade, the leaves that fall,
The sunshine investing over all—
The Indian summer here.

Was overhead, in the blue sky,
The downy clouds float softly by,
A lullaby in the breeze I hear,
And through the air its music rings;
All things peaceful hours keep;
My little one falls fast asleep,
His mother watching near.

Two baby boys—a God of love
Sends as a gift from Heaven above;
And like the shifting scenes bright,
Tinging the drifting clouds with light,
Their every look and motion new,
Breaking through some of grief and mist,
Are make my glorious.

GOOD-NIGHT.

Good night!
Now the weary rest by night,
And the busy lingers idle,
Over work that seems unending,
Tool and muse till morning light.
Good-night!

Go to rest!
Close the eyes with slumber prest;
In the streets the silence growing,
Wakes but to the watchmen blowing.
Night makes only one request—
Go to rest!

Slumber sweet!
Blessed dreams each dreamer greet,
He whom pain has kept from sleeping
In sweet dreams now lies calm creeping
Up to the Father's feet.
Slumber sweet!

Good-night!
Slumber till the morning light,
Slumber till the new to-morrow
Comes and brings its own new sorrow,
We are in the Father's sight.
Good night!

MY LOST POCKET-BOOK.

My name is Edney—Philip Clement Edney. That was my father's name before me. Twenty-odd years ago he did a small but comfortable dry-goods business in Utica. But in the panic of '57 he met with severe losses; and he had hardly weathered the financial storm when he was taken down with a disease from which he never recovered.

In his last illness he was deeply concerned for the future of his family. I was the eldest son, and he frequently expressed the hope, to my mother and to me, that in some way we should be able to find Harringford.

Thomas Harringford was a generous-hearted, but rather unprincipled, young man, who had been in my father's employ several years before.

He got into bad company and was guilty of some irregularity, as the modish gentry phrase it, and my father helped himself to my father's cash to the amount of several hundred dollars, before his dishonesty—for I mean his irregularity—was discovered. He was penitent, and confessed everything, but it was impossible for him to make restitution.

He had been a favorite of both my father and mother, and they could not bear to have him sent to the prison. So, on his promising to reform and lead an honest life in future, and repay the father, when he was able, the sums he had stolen, I was unappropriated—he was let off.

He went to parts where he was unknown, and only vague rumors concerning him had reached us since. One of those rumors was that he had been seen in Buffalo and Detroit, and that he was doing a prosperous business.

On selling up my father's estate, my mother found that she and her little family were left in straitened circumstances. Then we remembered what he had said about Harringford. I wrote to him letters addressed Buffalo and Detroit, but failed to receive answers. At last we were so much in need that I said:

"Mother, if you can spare the money for me to make the journey, I believe I can find him, and get at least a part payment of what he owes us."

It was a long time before she would listen to this proposal. She could ill afford the expense. Finally, by real wrestling with adversity, and by many a sacrifice, she consented to let me go.

I went first to Buffalo, where I began with the Postoffice and directory, but without being able to find the man I was searching for there. I proceeded to Detroit. No luck there either. I returned to Buffalo, stopping at Cleveland by the way, and finally gave up the search, concluding that Harringford must have gone elsewhere, and that the world was too large a haystack for me to hunt in for such a needle.

But my mother had told me to be sure to visit Niagara before my return; so one afternoon I went down by a late train to the Falls, which I saw by moonlight for the first time.

I was of course too poor to go to a first-class hotel, but put up at one both small and obscure. The next morning was fine. I was in good spirits, in spite of the failure of my undertaking, for I had youth and health. I passed the day at the Falls, but, for economy's sake, I felt that I ought to leave on the night train for Utica. So I prepared to take leave of the great cataract.

"But I am going to drink out of it first, anyway," I said to a young man whose acquaintance I had made that afternoon.

The American shore of the river was not fenced in from the public in those days, as I found it when I was there a year ago. We stood at the very brink, near the edge of the fall. The wild, tumbling rapids shot past us, seemed to pause an instant on the verge, broke into curves of marvelous green water, then crumbled masses of foam, and fell thundering into the abyss.

With that view before me, boy-like, I got down on my hands and knees for my drink. My lips touched the swift water. I had my drink, and was about to rise, when something dropped out of the inner breast-pocket of my coat, and shot away from my reach and sank from sight before I could put out my hand. In my astonishment, I was near making a leap after it, but the sight of the steaming gulf below brought me to my senses.

"Gone!" I exclaimed, flinging my hands in despair. "Did you see it?"

"See what?" said my companion.

"My pocket-book!" I replied, full of consternation. "It dropped from my coat-pocket into the water, and is lost. I came within one of going after it!"

He had seen nothing. I explained how it happened. I had always carried my pocket-book in that way, and never dropped it before. But in stooping far forward to bring my lips to the water, I had emptied my pocket and lost, in an instant, all my money, together with that poor outlawed note of Harringford's, among other more or less valuable papers.

My chance acquaintance expressed his sympathy in well-sounding words, but all at once he appeared to have grown cold toward me. Perhaps he expected I should want to borrow money of him; for money I should certainly need in getting away from the Falls. I still had my hotel-bill to pay and I could not very well travel by rail for nothing.

We had already exchanged cards, and I had ascertained that his name was Eastmore—that he was a reporter, or something of the sort, for a Buffalo daily paper. I thought a young man of his experience ought to be able to give me good advice, if nothing else, and I begged him to tell me what to do.

"Have you any friend in town that you can call on for assistance?" he asked.

"Not one," I said, and added, without thinking how it would take it, "You are the only acquaintance I have here except the Falls."

He laughed and looked embarrassed. "That's bad!" he said. "I would be glad to lend you a little, if I had any to spare, but I haven't. Perhaps the hotel folks will help you, if you can only convince them of the truth of your story."

A horrible suspicion flashed across my mind. I might pass for an impostor.

"The truth of it!" I exclaimed. "Why, I had my pocket-book right here with over a dollar in it. And what motive could I have"— In my bewilderment I could not finish my question.

"Of course you had your pocket-book," he answered, with a smile; "and mind, I don't say you have any motive for making a false impression. But the world is full of imposters, who are always inventing excuses for borrowing money or for omitting to pay their bills. Hotel-keepers have to deal with such characters pretty often, and we can't blame them for being a trifle suspicious of men who have lost their pocket-books."

He must have been impressed by the horrified look I gave him, for he immediately went on— "Of course I am as much convinced that you lost your pocket-book in the Falls as you say you did. I had seen it go over the edge of your coat, and I should never saw the money in it—though don't understand me to say that I have any doubt of your veracity either. I am only stating the case as it might look to other people, if you didn't carry such an honest face about with you."

"Thank you for so much!" I said, bitterly; for now I perceived by something in his look and tone which he tried hard to hide, that in his own mind, my story stood sadly in need of confirmation.

I couldn't blame him, however. Impostors are in the majority among smooth-tongued people in want of assistance; and the worst of their sin is that they throw discredit upon honest people who have been really unfortunate. I was destined to find that out by my sorrow.

I felt that the first thing to be done was to make my case known to my landlord, and I went back to the house. I told him, in as cool and business-like way as I could, what had happened, and asked him to trust me for the amount of my bill.

Eastmore went with me, and I hoped he would say something to corroborate my story; but he was very cautious. He stood at my elbow, a little behind, and I suspect there was something in his face which did not help my cause.

The landlord, a short, stocky, red-whiskered Irishman, glanced over his shoulder with the one good eye he had, and seemed to receive intelligence to my disadvantage.

I turned quickly. I don't think Eastmore had made a signal, but he had not concealed his incredulity. I found then that I might better have gone alone to the landlord.

"I don't know anything about your losing your pocket-book," said the Irishman, after hearing me out. "If you have no money, you must get some. My business is to keep a hotel, and I can't furnish guests with board and lodging for the fine stories they may tell."

The words stung me, but I managed to reply calmly:

"I don't ask you to do any such thing. I shall pay you every cent I owe you. But I have lost my money, and can't very well afford to stay here until I receive more."

Then it occurred to me that that was just what he would like to have me do. He could hold my valise for security, and my bill would be increasing, so I added:

"I shall be obliged to leave your house, anyway. If you will let me take my valise, I think I may get passed over the railroad; and I promise to send you the two dollars I owe you as soon as I reach Utica."

I was quite serious.

"What time is it?" he asked. I took out my watch and told him. "That's a good-looking turnip," he said. "Leave that, and you may take your baggage."

The watch had been my father's. I wouldn't have trusted it in his hands on any account.

"No thank you!" I said, and put it back into my pocket.

He saw that I distrusted him, and became abusive.

"You're a swindler!" he cried. "I've heard of you before. How many pocket-books have you lost this week? I've a cat here that could eat them all, and lick her chops for more. Ah!"—he shook his fist at me angrily—"I'm the wrong man for you to try your little confidence game on. If you come into my house again without the money," he shouted after me as I was turning my back on him indignantly, "I'll have you arrested! I'll have you in the lock-up!"

I think I was never so angry in my life; but what is the use of arguing with a wild beast? I held my tongue, and walked out of his miserable hotel without my baggage. I had been poorly accommodated there, and his charge, after all, was exorbitant—almost as much as I should have had to pay in those days at a first-class house.

I should have found no fault with that, and would gladly have sent him the money if he would have let me off; but to feel that I had been imposed upon as well as insulted increased my indignation.

Eastmore followed me out, and spoke some words intended to appear sympathizing; but I had no patience with the cold, suspicious, non-committal character of the fellow, and gave him but a curt reply. So he went his way, and I mine.

I had already resolved what to do. I walked boldly into a first-class hotel, entered my name on the register, and then asked the clerk to be good enough to put my watch in the hotel safe. It was an unusual act. I knew the clerk would wonder why I requested it; but I made no explanation. I then took a room and wrote a letter to my mother, telling her I thought I would be back the next morning, and serve my purpose as well as a telegram. I got my letter into the mail and took "mine ease in mine inn." I determined to enjoy my stay at the Falls while waiting for money to get away.

Before I left, while walking out of the hotel, I met Eastmore walking in. He gave me a curious smile and went by. Somehow, he seemed to be looking over the register for names.

I didn't have anything more to say to him, but sauntered away, with my head up. I looked eagerly, the next morning, for the expected letter from home. It did not come. But I got an interesting bit of news instead.

I took up a fresh breakfast-table newspaper which a gentleman had laid down, and read with feelings which you may perhaps imagine, this item, under the heading of "Spray from the Falls:"

"Don't drink out of the Cataract! That is what Philip Clement Edney attempted to do on Tuesday, in the presence of his employer, and he paid for it with a large and well-stuffed pocket-book, which took that way to the bottom of the river. The pocket-book belonged to American Full Dress, Philip Clement Edney, who bought the finest wardrobe in Buffalo for the Eagle House, when he found that he had fallen heir to a fortune. The fortune has not come to settle his bill. Unfortunately our reporter could not swear to the wallet and its contents; and in the age of dead beats and confidence men, U. S. naturally fell under some suspicion.

"If an impostor—which our reporter did not believe he was—a very young and a very good-looking gentleman, and a well-dressed person to boot—was one only say that it was an experiment drink, and refer the greatest leader to the Cataract of Niagara. Which, by means its being read, we have placed at the beginning, and her repeat at the end. Don't drink out of the Cataract."

HOT and cold streaks shot over me as I read this smart paragraph. I burned to get hold of Eastmore's sagacious nose, and be rude to it. My name—the name which his reporter had given in full—was on the hotel register, and already, no doubt, I was an object of suspicion by the clerk. I arose hastily and left the dining-hall.

I went to cool my heat under the cliff below the Falls, and did not return to the hotel until noon. Again I asked the clerk for letters. There were none for me; but there was something else—a card.

"H. F. Marston" was the name I read on it; and I was informed that Mr. Marston had inquired for me.

"I don't know him," I said. "Who is he?"

By way of reply the clerk struck a bell, called a messenger and sent him off to see if Mr. Marston was in his room, and to tell him that "Mr. Edney" had returned. Then he said to me:

"You are the young man who left a watch with me, I believe. Do you wish for it?"

"I shall wish for it," I said, "when I have money to pay my bill, which I am expecting by every mail."

"Then it wasn't simply for safe keeping that you handed it to me?" he said.

"Not altogether," I replied. "I had no baggage, and to avoid unpleasant explanations, and perhaps still more unpleasant suspicions, I thought I would place that security in your hands."

He smiled as he took the watch from the safe and handed it back to me.

"I don't require the security. I believe you are honest, Mr. Edney. The paragraph in this morning paper has excited interest, and one or two persons have asked about you. Mr. Marston wished particularly to see you. Walk up stairs."

The messenger had in fact just returned for me, and I went with him, wondering all the way what would happen next.

I found a tall, well-dressed, fine-looking gentleman waiting for me in his private parlor.

"Is this Philip Clement Edney?" he said, with a smile, which brought up a host of recollections.

I stared at him, all a-tremble with excitement. I might have passed him twenty times in the hotel without knowing him; but now I was sure of my man at a glance.

"That is my name," I said; "and you"—

He stopped me with another engaging smile.

"I am Henry F. Marston, please remember. If I had another name once, I should be glad to have it forgotten. But I am willing that you should know who I am. When I saw your name in the paper this morning, I knew it must be you. Then I found you were stopping at the same house with me. Your father was very, very kind to me, Philip; and when I learned"—

The tears actually came into his eyes, as he faltered; and at that moment I forgave him all.

"You were a little shaver when I knew you," he went on, with another blushing smile. "I should not have recognized you; but you have your father's name and your mother's eyes. I should know why I have neglected to communicate with them. When I found that you were here, my heart yearned toward you. How are your parents, Philip?"

He had not heard of my father's death. When I told him, and described the straitened circumstances of our family, he appeared greatly astonished and conscience-stricken.

"Why haven't you sent for me?" he asked.

"My father, in his last moments, begged us to let you know our circumstances, and I have gone through three cities in search of you," I replied. "But no Thomas Harringford"——

He stopped me again. "Of course not," he said. "There are so much nam now, and never has been, since I left Utica and began a new life under a new name. I have been much to blame that I have never repaid your father. Do you know the amount of the debt?"

"The face of the note was $740," I answered. "But that, I am sorry to say, went over the Falls in my pocket-book."

"But I have a letter to you from my mother, which I have left in my valise at the Eagle House."

"Go and get it," he said.

"I can't," I said, "for I have no money to pay my bill there."

He at once opened his pocket-book. "Take that and get your valise."

He put a twenty-dollar bank-note into my hand.

In half an hour I had redeemed my baggage, told the landlord of the Eagle House, in plain language, what I thought of his conduct, returned to Harringford's

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Oct. 10, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The semi annual trade book sale here is always an interesting occasion and is one which grows in importance year by year. Its idea, when first instituted, was to enable publishers and dealers to clear off by auction each spring and fall the surplus or unsalable stock which they might find on hand at the time of its occurrence. Its degrees, however, this use of the trade sale become secondary to another, namely, the ascertaining of the real market value of different works by putting up small lots of each and noting the prices obtained. Doing this year by year and comparing the figures brought by any given book at different times furnishes the publisher the most reliable indications of the growth or decline of its popularity. Nearly all the great publishing houses now avail themselves of this method which has in consequence gained great importance. The fall sale for 1878, just closed, lasted eight days and disposed of a large quantity of books.

It was a noticeable fact that the heavier classes of reading found the greatest favor. Scientific and religious works brought relatively larger figures than either new or standard fiction, Buckle and John Stuart Mill leading Dickens and Thackeray, and Webster's Dictionary being held at stiffer prices than anything else in the catalogue. More than 1,000 of the various editions were sold and but the publishers been willing to drop fifty cents from their usual rates 20,000 copies of the Unabridged could have been easily disposed of.

Seeing these facts in the report of the trade sale reminds me of a flying visit that I made to the office of the Merriams when in Springfield a few months ago. This firm, owning and publishing the remarkable "Unabridged," was started under the style of G. & C. Merriam as far back as 1831 and for a full generation its founders were its only members. Of late years a third brother has been admitted, but no change was made in the name which will soon have completed a half century of existence. The concern published at first only law books; but coming at length into relations with Noah Webster, their attention was turned to educational publishing, and they issued the famous "Webster's Speller," of which they still own the copyright, and of which I suppose some forty or fifty millions of copies must have been printed. Their great work, however, has been the publication of the dictionary, and this I firmly believe has been and still is to them as much a labor of love as of profit. The thoroughness, literality and vigor with which they have handled it from the start are the admiration of the whole book trade, and can hardly fail to have been remarked by the most casual observer. Having been impressed by these qualities one is hardly prepared for the quiet and not rather quaint, old fashioned air of the venerable office, itself located on a side street of a provincial city, where so much important and effective work is planned, and whose influences is so extensive with the language.

During my brief call in the room more of interest than I have space to describe I was shown, among other things, a copy of the first "Revised Edition" of the Dictionary published in 1837, and by comparing this with the latest copy could obtain a good idea as to the changes and growth of our etymology during these thirty years. The way in which Webster's list been made to keep pace with this constant progress, and even to anticipate the latter would make a most interesting letter by itself. The mass of manuscript which I saw just as it came from the most eminent specialists of European and America, and which forms a part only of the copy from which the present edition was electrotyped, gives some idea of the vast amount of labor and research which must have been expended in order that its results, boiled down to the extreme of condensation, should fill nearly 3 000 printed quarto pages. When next you have occasion to look upon a word in Webster's just notice what a stupendous head work and hand work its compilation and arrangement, its type setting and proof reading, its wood engraving, printing and binding have involved.

The sudden and mysterious disappearance from Marquette, Michigan, of the books of the New York Iron Mining Company, which were to have been used in the lawsuit set against Ex-Governor Tilden, was supplemented by a small comedy in this city. Under the supposition that missing books might be found in Mr. Thos. Bertland's possession our Assistant United States District Attorney procured a warrant authorizing a search of that gentleman's trunk, which was expected from the west. Numerous deputies were stationed at the Grand Central Depot, and baggage from the west was examined or carefully criticised. In the meanwhile the sought for trunk slipped through the fingers of the anxious officials without being noticed, and the inconvenient question of "who stole the books" is still an open one.

Amusements here, if we include out door sports under that head, are brisk. Close on the close of the rifle tournament at Creedmoor comes the great cricket contest between a picked eleven from Australia and several of our home clubs which has the special attraction of novelty and which is doing much to popularize this distinctively English game at which the scores show that we are already but little behind our atlantic cousins. Then there is the great walking match between O'Leary and Hughes for 1 000 and the champion belt won in England by the former, and more exciting than all other contests of this nature we have had the telegraphic reports from the long delayed and hotly contested rowing match at Lachine between Courtney and Hanlan in which the representative of the States was finally whipped by the invincible Canadian to the great sorrow of the crowds who had anxiously watched the unlucky boat for days in hopes of a different result.

And by the way, can any one tell what there is about two men's trying to see who can pull his boat up and down the river the quickest, that can so interest and excite a million or so of people, most of whom hardly know the bow of a shell from its stern, and who would hardly give a moment's thought or attention to an international discussion, like, for example, the late Fisheries Commission, involving millions of money and the possibility of grave diplomatic complications? This question is altogether too much for me, but its facts are indisputable.

In the line of city amusements proper, we have more than I can record. At the Fifth Avenue Theater Mary Anderson has just closed her brilliant engagement to make way for the refined and delicate Mme Modjeska who is now captivating critics alike by her subtle powers. The rollicking absurdities and exquisite caricatures of the Florences in "The Mighty Dollar" fill the Grand Opera House with laughter and applause. Thomas has evoked the swain's sighs of his peerless orchestra amid mingled tears and cheers, and now leaves for his new home in the West. Wilhelmj, the greatest of violinists, is taxing the vocabulary of the critics at Steinway Hall. Rose Eytinge at the Broadway, Henry VIII at Booth's with Genevieve Ward as Queen Catherine, and novelties at the Union Square and the minor theatres complete a list of great variety and attractiveness.

RADIX

The Gallant Greenback.

The greenback is extolled as the money of the war, the gallant, glorious greenback that carried us through. Senator Morton did not dilute in this strain, and it is now very familiar. But without considering the necessity of the Legal Tender Act at the time of its passage, and conceding that the greenback currency was most serviceable during the war, it is evident that it was not so for any of the reasons that are urged for its illimitable or irredeemable issue, or for the printing of an indefinite quantity of paper and calling it "fiat" or "absolute" money. The greenback carried us through the war because it was a promise which it was believed would be fulfilled. The greenback did not call itself a dollar, but it pledged the government to pay a dollar when it was successful. Does any "Greenbacker" suppose that if it had been issued as "fiat" or "absolute" money, the result would have been the same? Creditors could not have refused it, of course, for old debts if it had been made a legal tender; but who could have compelled a man to sell the products of a day's labor for a piece of brown paper?

The same principle applies to the demand of the Greenback party that the Government shall make the money, and issue enough of it to secure full wages to labor. How is this to be done? How is this so-called money to be put in circulation? Of course it is not to be given away; for if it be the duty of government to give money to those who ask for it, who will work, who will do the labor of production? But if it is not to be given away, it is said that at least the bonds may be paid with it. How would this help the laboring poor man? In the first place, such a "payment" would be the most flagrant breach of faith upon the part of the government, so that no man in the world would then trust its word for a penny; and in the second place, every enterprise and industry would be paralyzed by the confusion and uncertainty and loss of confidence that would follow this repudiation, and by that paralysis labor would be stopped and starved. The truth is that we cannot break faith in any direction, or even propose to break it, without paying for it, and the organized agitation to persuade the country to agree to break faith prolongs and deepens the prostration of industry.

"If the "fiat" or "absolute" money is not to be given away, but is to be issued in payment of the public debt, it will be paid to the holders of the debt in the first place, and will only gradually come into the hands of the laboring man. Hence would result a condition which has been well stated by Mr. Poor in his "Hand Book of the Times, which is worth careful attention for its historical survey of paper money as well as for many of its financial suggestions. The result of paying paper for the debt would be the decline of every industry, and the consequent decline of demand for labor. The poorer man would then be forced to sell his actual property, so that the paper would gradually pass into the hands of the poor, and the actual property of the country into those of the rich. But as the laborer found that the paper, whether you call it "fiat" or "absolute" money, or whatever else you call it, would only buy a variable value of necessities, measured in gold, which is always the standard, he would himself demand the gold, that he might have some certainty and know the value of his money. It is but another illustration of the fact that government may call anything it chooses money, but it can not make money by a law, nor by any quantity of printing. It cannot force a man to give a day's work for a bad egg. There is nothing new or true in the doctrines of the Greenback party. The French assignats and our old continental currency were "fiat" money. The Continental was the gallant currency of the Revolution. But that did not enable a hundred dollars of it to buy a pair of shoes. The greenback was the currency of the war for the Union. But it was an honored and honorable currency only because it was believed to be the promise of an honorable nation.—Harper's Weekly.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Oct 10, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The semi annual trade book sale here is always an interesting occasion and is one which grows in importance year by year. Its idea, when first instituted, was to enable publishers and dealers to clear off by auction each spring and fall the surplus or unsalable stock which they might find on hand at the time of the occurrence. By degrees, however, this use of the trade sale became secondary to another, namely, the ascertaining of the real market value of different works by putting up small lots of each and noting the prices obtained. Doing this year by year and comparing the figures brought by any given book at different times furnishes the publisher the most reliable indications of the growth or decline of its popularity. Nearly all the great publishing houses now avail themselves of this method which has in consequence gained great importance. The fall sale for 1878, just closed, lasted eight days and disposed of a large quantity of books.

It was a noticeable fact that the heavier classes of reading found the greatest favor. Scientific and religious works brought relatively larger figures than either new or standard fiction, Buckle and John Stuart Mill leading Dickens and Thackeray, and Webster's Dictionary being held at stiffer prices than anything else in the catalogue. More than 1,000 of the various editions were sold and had the publishers been willing to drop fifty cents from their usual rates 20,000 copies of the Unabridged could have been easily disposed of.

Basing these facts in the report of the trade sale reminds me of a flying visit I made to the office of the Merriams when in Springfield a few months ago. This firm, owning and publishing the remarkable "Unabridged," was started under the style of G. & C. Merriam as far back as 1831 and for a full generation its founders were its only members. Of late years a third brother has been admitted, but no change was made in the name which will soon have completed a half century of existence. The concern published at first only law books, but coming at length into relations with Noah Webster, their attention was turned to educational publishing, and they issued the famous "Webster's Spelling," of which they still own the copyright, and of which I suppose some forty or fifty millions of copies must have been printed. Their great work, however, has been the publication of the dictionary, and this I firmly believe has been and still is to them not much a labor of love as of profit. The shrewdness, liberality and vigor with which they have handled it from the start are the admiration of the whole book trade, and one hardly fit to have been remarked by the most casual observer. Being soon impressed by these qualities one is hardly prepared for the quaint and the rather quaint, old fashioned air of the venerable office, itself located on a side street of a provincial city, where so much important and effective work is planned, and whose telling case is so extensive with the language.

During my brief call here I saw many of interest than I have space to describe. I was shown, among other things, a copy of the first "Bowdler Edition" of the Dictionary published in 1812, and on comparing this with the latest copy could easily see how as to its changes and growth of our etymology during these thirty years. The way in which Webster's last hour made to keep pace with this constant progress, and even to anticipate the latter would make a most interesting letter by itself. The mass of manuscript which I saw just as it came from the most eminent specialists of Europe and America, and which forms a part only of the copy from which the present edition was electrotyped, gives some idea of the vast amount of labor and research which must have been expended in order that its results, boiled down to the extent of condensation, should fill nearly 3000 printed quarto pages. When next you have occasion to look up a word in Webster's, just notice what a stupendous hard work and hard work its completion and arrangement, its type-setting and proof reading, its wood engraving, printing and binding have involved.

The sudden and mysterious disappearance from Marquette, Michigan, of the books of the New York Iron Mining Company, which were to have been used in the income suit against Ex-Governor Tilden, was supplemented by a small comedy in this city. Under the supposition that missing books might be found in Mr Tilden Barlandt's possession our Assistant United States District Attorney procured a warrant authorizing a search of that gentleman's trunk, which was expected from the west. Numerous deputies were stationed at the Grand Central Depot, and baggage from the west was examined or carefully criticised. In the meanwhile the sought for trunk slipped through the fingers of the anxious officials without being noticed, and the momentous question of "who stole the books" is still an open one.

Amusements here, if we include out door sports under that head, are brisk. Close on the close of the rifle tournament at Creedmoor comes the great cricket contest between a picked eleven from Australia and several of our home clubs which has the special attraction of novelty and which is doing much to popularize this distinctively English game at which the scores show that we are already but little behind our athletic cousins. Then there is the great walking match between O'Leary and Hughes for 1,000 and the champion belt won in England by the former, and more exciting than all other contests of this nature we have had the telegraphic reports from the long delayed and hotly contested rowing match at Lachine between Courtney and Hanlan in which the representative of the States was finally whipped by the invincible Canadian to the great sorrow of the crowds who had anxiously watched the betting towards for days in hopes of a different result.

And by the way, can any one tell what there is about two men trying to see who can pull his boat up and down the river the quickest, that can so interest and excite a million or so of people, most of whom hardly know the bow of a skiff from its stern, and who would hardly give a moment's thought or attention to an international discussion, like, for example, the late Fisheries Commission, involving millions of money and the possibility of grave diplomatic complications? This question is altogether too much for me, but its facts are indisputable.

In the line of city amusements proper, we have more than I can record. At the Fifth Avenue Theater Mary Anderson has just closed her brilliant engagement to make way for the refined and delicate Mme Modjeska who is now expected to entice critics alike by her subtle powers. The rollicking absurdities and exquisite caricatures of the Florences in "The Mighty Dollar" fill the Grand Opera House with laughter and applause, while Sothern has evoked the swain's song of his peerless orchestra amid mingled tears and cheers, and now leaves for his new home in the West, Wilkeley, the greatest of Yankumists, is taxing the vocabulary of the critics at Stalway Hall, Rose Eytinge at the Broadway, Henry VIII at Booth's with Genevieve Ward as Queen Catherine, and novelties at the Union Square and the minor theatres complete a list of great variety and attractiveness.

RADIX

The Gallant Greenback.

The greenback is extolled as the money of the war, the gallant, glorious greenback that carried us through. Senator Morton did not disdain this strain, and it is now very familiar. But without considering the necessity of the Legal Tender Act at the time of its passage, and conceding that the greenback currency was most serviceable during the war, it is evident that it was not so for any of the reasons that are urged for its illimitable or irredeemable issue, or for the printing of an indefinite quantity of paper and calling it "fiat" or "absolute" money. The greenbacks carried us through the war because it was a promise which it was believed would be fulfilled. The greenback did not call itself a dollar, but it pledged the government to pay a dollar when it was successful. Does any "Greenbacker" suppose that if it had been issued as "fiat" or "absolute" money, the result would have been the same? Creditors could not have refused it, of course, for old debts if it had been made a legal tender; but who could have compelled a man to sell the products of a day's labor for a piece of brown paper?

The same principle applies to the demand of the Greenback party that the Government shall make the money, and issue enough of it to secure full wages to labor. How is this to be done? How is this so-called money to be put in circulation? Of course it is not to be given away; for if it be the duty of government to give money to those who ask for it, who will work, who will do the labor at production? But if it is not to be given away, it is said that at least the bonds may be paid with it. How would this help the laboring poor man? In the first place, such a "payment" would be the most flagrant breach of faith upon the part of the Government, so that no man in the world would then trust its word for a penny; and in the second place, every enterprise and industry would be paralyzed by the confusion and uncertainty and loss of confidence that would follow this repudiation, and by that paralysis labor would be stopped and starved. The truth is that we cannot break faith in any direction, or even propose to break it, without paying for it, and the organized agitation to persuade the country to agree to break faith prolongs and deepens the prostration of industry.

"If the "fiat" or "absolute," money is not to be given away, but is to be loaned in payment of the public debt, it will be paid to the holders of the debt in the first place, and will only gradually come into the hands of the laboring man. Hence would result a condition which has been well stated by Mr. Poor in his "Hand Book of the Times, which is worth careful attention for its historical survey of paper money as well as for many of its financial suggestions. The result of paying paper for the debt would be the decline of every industry, and the consequent decline of demand for labor. The poorer man would then be forced to sell his actual property, so that the paper would gradually pass into the hands of the poor, and the actual property of the country into those of the rich. But as the laborer found that the paper, whether you call it "fiat" or "absolute" money, or whatever else you call it, would only buy a variable value of necessities, measured in gold, which is always the standard, he would himself demand the gold, that he might have some certainty and know the value of his money. It is but another illustration of the fact that government may call anything it chooses money, but it can not make money by a law, nor by any quantity of printing. It cannot force a man to give a day's work for a bad egg. There is nothing new or true in the doctrines of the Greenback party. The French assignats and our old continental currency were "fiat" money. The Continental was the gallant currency of the Revolution. But that did not enable a hundred dollars of it to buy a pair of shoes. The greenback was the currency of the war for the Union. But it was an honored and honorable currency only because it was believed to be the promise of an honorable nation.—Harper's Weekly.

Bijah and Novel-Reading.

A motherly-looking woman, about fifty years of age, entered the parlor, and when invited to lighten her burden of woe and anxiety she began:

"Mr. Jos, I have a daughter."

"And I have three," was his encouraging reply.

"This daughter of ours is a dear girl, Mr. Jay. She is our only child, and of course we are concerned about her future."

"Very likely, madam. I used to be concerned for four my daughters would marry blind men."

"Our daughter has a passion for reading, Mr. Jay. She reads about ten novels per week, and often sits up till midnight to read the story-papers. Her father and I have been wondering if she is not reading a little too much. I was going by, you see, and I thought I'd call in and see you about it. Do you think this novel-reading will affect her future? What would you advise?"

"Well, if I had a daughter," he slowly replied, "I think I'd let her read about twenty-four novels per week, I'd let her sit up till midnight, and be shed till noon; I'd hire a servant to comb her hair and cook her canaries; I would let her lay her lard to housework, and I'd practice her till she could pound a piano and drawl her voice in a fashionable way."

"And then?" she queried as in paused.

"Then, when she was old enough to marry, the whole family would turn out and hunt down a husband for her, wish 'em much joy, and——"

"And what?"

"And know that she would make him the most miserable wretch in town, madam. I don't teach your daughter to sweep or cook, because it is unfashionable. Don't teach her to know butter from beanbones, because it will affect her standing in society. Don't teach her to cut and baste and fit and sew, because some one may suspect that her grandmother invented the needle. Bring her up to be nothing and know nothing. Get her three average servant girls to run her house for her, and if her husband doesn't run away or commit suicide within eight months it's because he hasn't brains enough to come in when it hails!"

"Mr. Jay, I shall not take your advice!" she indignantly replied.

"My dear woman, I haven't given you any," he humbly remarked.

"I think we know enough to manage our daughter, sir!"

"I believe you, madam."

"And she shall read all the novels she want to, sir!"

"She shall, madam; I have a dozen to lend you."

The woman rushed out in an indignant manner, leaving a cloud of dust behind, and the old man fought a fly off his bald head and mused:

"Perhaps a wife who can jump out of bed at midnight and run down-stairs and mix a mustard plaster in the dark, or knock an old barrel to pieces and cook dinner for three country relations at twenty minutes' notice, hasn't of no account in this world, but I've got just an hour and a half to argy that point with some human hyena.—Detroit Free Press.

Civilization of Ants.

At the recent meeting of the British Association Sir John Lubbock read an interesting paper on the present state of civilization among the ants. In the course of it he confirmed the experiments of Huber as to their being able to recognize their friends, even after a long absence, or rather their acquaintance; for, although he saw that they attacked and killed their enemies, he could not find any trace of warm affection for their friends. He tested this by taking some ants and some and sprinkling them in a bottle covered with muslin. Those in the nest took no notice of them, but when strangers were put in they were indignant and never stopped until they cut through the muslin and attacked them. He marked some ants in a nest with paint and found that their friends removed it, but a stranger going into the nest was restless and not quiet as recently as possible. It would be interesting to know how they recognize their friends. It might be by smell or some sign, or by actual recognition.

In order to try whether they could recognize them when insensible, he first used chloroform, but they generally killed them, and he then made them intoxicated. He did so by putting them into whisky, not whisky into them, for they were too sensible to take it even on week days. He tried an experiment with twenty-five friends and thirty strangers. The sober ants, coming out of the nests, and finding the intoxicated ants lying helpless on their backs in ludicrous attitudes, proceeded to take them up and carry them off. Of the twenty-five they brought twenty into the nest, where, probably, they soon slept off the effects. The other five they dropped into the moat of water which then surrounded the nest. Why they did so he could not tell. Perhaps they fell into the hands of stern teetotalers. As to the thirty strangers, twenty-eight were thrown into the moat and the other two were taken no notice of. He took some pupæ out of a nest, and, on putting them back after some months, found that they were received as friends, while some which were put into a different nest were attacked. It was generally stated that all the eggs in the nest of ants or bees were laid by Queens. That was not strictly so, for some were laid by workers, though the rarer were exceptional. He had some nests in which there were no Queens, and yet there were eggs in them, but the eggs laid by workers always produce males. He had made some experiments to test the sense of ants. He found that they were capable of distinguishing between different colors, and avoided violet. Their sense of smell was also delicate, but he had seen no proof that they were capable of hearing, and he had proved by an experiment, which he described, that they were not capable of communicating with each other by sound. There were thirty species of ants in these countries, and 700 in other countries, and there were many interesting problems to be solved in relation to them.

Sir Walter Elliott asked how ants communicated with each other, and mentioned that on one occasion in India, when making a preparation of a spider, an ant approached and attempted to carry off the specimen. He threw it away, and then five others came, and, having occasion to leave the room, he found on his return that the specimen was gone. The President observed that perhaps in tropical regions the ants were more civilized, and possessed a power of communicating with each other which was not enjoyed by ants elsewhere.

Artemus Ward as a Practical Joker.

Browne and Griswold, "the Fat Contributor," were in newspaper work at the same time in Cleveland, and were very intimate friends. One day there came to the city a dramatic reader, a man of genius note, but of a very timid disposition. These two worthies in some manner discovered that he was a private soldier. Pacific by name, just let out of solitary confinement in the prison at Savona. The first use, it seems, to which he put his freedom was to insert a reprimand from the Colonel, and to hurl a volley of insulting epithets at him and the superior officers. Among the witnesses for the defense in one Orsete Marisni, another jail-bird set at liberty from Savona. He, too, was a private soldier, twenty-five years of age; while a "fiscal" witness, or witness for the prosecution, is Corporal Cazzaniga, employed under the Governor of the prison—the same Corporal, in fact, whom the accused had insulted.

The court had just withdrawn to hold a consultation when Corporal Gazzaniga happened to walk past the witness Marisni. This fellow, armed with an awl which he had contrived to conceal about his person, flung himself on the Corporal and dealt him three wounds in rapid succession. Soldiers, subalterns and officers at once surrounded the infuriated assailant and dragged him to the guard-room, where he was imprisoned. Meanwhile the wounds he had inflicted on the Corporal were found to be serious, particularly one between the tenth and eleventh ribs. The weapon with which they were dealt was searched for on the prisoner, but without success, till it was found sticking under a bench in the guard-room where he was secured.

During all this tumult the accused Paolini had gradually shifted up to the Judge's bench. One of these, a Captain, seeing him so near, and suspecting him of some sinister purpose, told him to mind his clothes and show he had no weapon concealed about him. None was found, and the Captain bade him take off his shoes. The fellow demurred. The Captain insisted, till with much needless delay Paolini slipped off one shoe, and, holding it by the tip, struck the Captain a violent blow in the face with the heel. The officer fell stunned. At this point the excitement and confusion became indescribable. The public, who were only adding to the tumult, were made to withdraw, and the court proceeded at once to try the witness Marisni, who had wounded the Corporal. The Public Prosecutor pleaded for capital punishment. The advocate Erasmo Valle, having undertaken Marisni's defense, asked in vain for a postponement of the trial, urging that the fellow had acted under maniacal impulse, and was in fact irresponsible. The court found for the Public Prosecutor, holding that the act had been premeditated, and condemned Oreste Marisni to be shot in the back.

As for Paolini, the Public Prosecutor, considering the offense for which he had been brought before the tribunal and the blow he had dealt one of the presiding Judges, demanded the sword of a decent fatal stroke, pouring about them to see that Towser did not come suddenly around a corner. They knocked on the front door; no response. At the side door; no answer. They went in. There was not a soul at home. A table spread and a most substantial meal was before them. It was like a dream from the Arabian nights. The dinner was, doubtless, awaiting the return of the family from church. The pedestrians fell to, and their knives and forks soon smoked with the friction of execution. To say that they fared sumptuously would convey no idea of the amount they ate nor the intense satisfaction with which the viands were received.

As they were finishing the feast a knock was heard. Bruce, with unparalleled cheek, went to the door. There stood two older tramps, who asked for something to eat. Bruce, in a rare spirit of mischief, questioned them closely in regard to their travels, and finally asked if they would chop wood for their dinners. They answered yes. He then took them to a wood-pile that he had noticed in the rear of the house, and they went to work. Bruce and Flood, filling their pockets with cookies, made out the side way from the house and went to a neighboring hill, where they had a full view of the wood-pile and the toiling tramps. There they gloated over the picture. To make their measure of enjoyment run over, the owner of the farmhouse with several daughters and two stalwart sons arrived on the scene, the devastation of the dinner was discovered, and the two swearing tramps at the wood-pile seized as the depredators. All was seen by the two on the hill, from the arrival of the family to the lynching preparations of the wood-sellers.—Indianapolis News.

Death in the Oil-Can.

A man out on South Hill had reason to believe that his Superintendent of Guinea was in the habit of using kerosene to start the morning fires. He placed his suspicions in the form of a charge, which was indignantly denied, and proof demanded. He wasn't ready with his testimony, and the case was dismissed for lack of evidence. But his suspicions increased, and he ordered a secret investigation, and appointed himself Chairman of the committee, with power to send for persons and papers. He laid his plans with care, and the next morning he followed his maid-servant down stairs at a careful and respectful distance, and hid himself near the kitchen door, where he could not see nor be seen, while he could hear very distinctly whatever was said or done. The rustle of paper and the rattle of dry light wood was succeeded by busy steps toward the closet in the cellar-way. Then he heard the gurgling of a liquid, as though it was bubbling out of a small tin spout. He heard the door shut down and then the scrape of a match.

"I'm," he heard the maid-servant remark. Then another match snapped and a barely audible lizzie succeeded. Grimly smiled the silent man by the outer door.

"I'm," remarked the maid-servant, a little petulantly. Another match snapped and blazed up. Another sound of the scratching of a match on the face of the man deepened into a grin.

"Well, I never did!" came from the kitchen, and there was heard the sound of more hurrying on the light wood. Another match and more silence.

"Well, did you ever?" queried the queen of the range, evidently anxious to obtain testimony corroborative of her own experience, as set forth in her previous statement that she never did. The man sitting outside the door throttled himself with both hands and softly pounded the ground with his heels. Something evidently excited him, and when the next match snapped he caught himself by the legs and bit fiercely into the corner of the door-frame in a frenzied effort to smother a hollow groan.

"The old Scratch is in the oil, I do believe," said a troubled voice in the kitchen, and more hurrying ensued. Another match, another, another. And the man crawled off behind the cistern-box and hugged his knees with convulsive expressions and silent demonstrations of interest, when he heard the angry voice inside the kitchen say:

"Plague on such oil! I'd like to pour it all down Will Darling's back!"

Another match, and then a confused sound of rattling and scraping, and a tearful woman came to the door and hurled an armful of soaked paper and light wood out into the yard and kicked an oil-can after it. The smiliar man crept back up stairs unseen. Breakfast was late that morning, and when the queen of the kitchen was asked the cause wherefore, she said somebody had left the shed door open and all the light-wood was damp. And no man that ever filled an oil-can with non-explosive cistern water ever looked half so innocent as the man who sat at the head of that table choking over a graham muffin.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Rose-Tinted Teeth.

JAPANESE women color their teeth coal-black, and the fashionable ladies of New York have now commenced dying theirs in a delicate rose-colored tint. A reporter of the Mercury, having learned that a dentist on Madison avenue was engaged in gratifying this latest freak of New York fashion, interviewed him on the subject, when the following conversation ensued:

"You are engaged in coloring ladies' teeth light red, I understand," said the reporter.

"What has caused this singular idea?" he would not tell you that. I am ashamed of dabbling in this sort of business (and you mustn't mention my name); but my best female friends have called upon me for it, and of course I could not refuse them, though I explained to them the danger. They were not to blame, however, as women's teeth red comes, so far as I know, from China. Only ladies of the highest distinction there indulge in it, and I believe it is the mark of the most aristocratic class. The lower classes of women there dye their teeth bright yellow or dark red. Who imported the fashion here I do not know; but a gentleman formerly engaged in business at Shanghai is selling the dyeing substance here. That substance is extremely expensive, so dear, in fact, that only ladies of wealth are able to purchase it."

"But what is the subject of this dyeing process? It must make the teeth look repulsive." "Not exactly. Ladies who have irregular teeth look more attractive after the dye has been applied. They have to put another substance on their lips to make them look as pale as possible. You know that lip-coloring has been going on among women for many years past. Then comes the enameling of the teeth, which was a precarious and mostly unsuccessful process. Beside, it ruined the teeth invariably, and more being ensuite in the enameling substance, it was quite dangerous to apply."

"There is no danger, then, in the rose-tinting substance?" "To tell you the truth, there must be. What the Chinese make it of we do not know, but we obtain here in this country the ingredient in it. Of course we do not want it to be analyzed, for that would, in all probability, establish the fact that it could be produced for a few cents. It would injure our business, and popularize the application of the substance among fashionable women, while it is now confined to the best classes of society. The other day a gentleman came to me quite excitedly and said to me: 'What business had you to color my wife's teeth so horribly?' 'Well, she wanted it,' I replied. 'But do they look natural?' he asked. 'Her teeth are broken off in consequence and that she has made me quite sick,' rejoined the man. I went home with him to investigate the matter. I took an artificial set of teeth and applied the dyeing substance to it. The teeth were so much poorer in color than before that a great effort to break them out. The substance colored them delicately red, and I then tried to break them off. They had become as brittle as gingerbread. Let me repeat the experiment.

He produced a small vial containing an entirely colorless fluid. Dropping a very little of it on a sponge, he rubbed it half a dozen times over an upper set of teeth. In five minutes the white color of the teeth had changed to a beautiful rose tint. Then he handed the set to the reporter and asked him to break off the teeth. They went off immediately, and without the slightest effort on the part of the reporter. The latter asked to be shown the vial containing the fluid. A very strong but by no means unpleasant odor emanated from it. "The innocuous vial costs me $100," said the dentist.

"What do you charge for an application of this dyeing substance?" asked the reporter. The dentist evasively answering the question. "I charge for such an application in proportion to the price of the substance," he said. "And the price of the substance by which the lips are whitened, what does it cost?" "Oh, that costs little or nothing. Common white beauty wash, or pearl white or rice powder will do for that purpose, if properly applied."

"Are many dentists engaged in this business?" "No, I know of only five, and only one of them, as I can swear, uses not the genuine substance, but an inferior preparation, which must be very poisonous."

"Have you many applications by ladies desirous of having their teeth colored red?"

"A great many. You have noticed my sign? I have put upon it the words 'Red teeth inserted here.' Fashionable ladies, seeing that, come in, and want to know the price of the application. Most of them look sharply when they hear how expensive it is. But enough pay the price demanded, and in consequence the dentists will soon have an increased demand for false teeth."

"How long will the dye produce its effects? Will not the color fade very soon?"

"No, it will not fade at all. If the dye did not affect the teeth most injuriously it would last for years. But in six months the teeth thus colored will be ruined."

Humiliating over the insanities of fashionable inventions, the reporter withdrew.—N. Y. Mercury.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and ACUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to enrich the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of DR. JOHN BULL'S VEGETABLE PILLS will be sufficient for the purpose.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only bas the right to manufacture and sell SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. We made a Democratic trip to the north road on the 28th, and found the people well pleased with the result. Mr. Ingersoll's large majority in the Jerome township was a surprise to many. Robert Thompson, Jr., is talking of building a large granary, and James Agar is putting up a good barn. Activity denotes thrift and industry.

Sabbath Services.—Rev. and Mrs. Cooper, of this village, are very much cast down in spirits at present. The poor fellow's pocket-book was taken from his pocket while he was taking a lunch on the cars Mr Cooper was taking his line across the desk, when a loose shark gave him an unexpected hug together with a warning brother of P. and March on the other. He went down but came to the surface and grasped a slippery pile, but his extreme weight overcame him and he was gradually sinking. Young Marsh held Cooper up until help came. He gave up and bade everybody good bye. Three times before being rescued. It is reasonably safe to say, present at a time more pleasant.

DANIEL BENNETT.—A most serious surgery was committed on the person of Daniel Gamble, in Boyne village, on Thursday evening. The doctor arrived late the same night and as all the boys made her last to rest at their desk and went to supper. In their absence some unknown person entered through the window to the water closet, pried open the cover of the Captain's sanctuary, in the vessel, and took an amount of money, supposed to be in the neighborhood of $20. No clue to the thief.

The Ladies' Aid Society have resolved to purchase an organ for the M. E. Church. To this end they will have a "Mung Social" at the residence of Hon. E. H. Green next Wednesday evening. Both misses and unmarried are cordially invited to be present. Meals tickets at half price. The unique spectacle of a lady who will remain silent for the space of two minutes will be presented. Let everybody forget finances and the quarrels of the campaign, and give the ladies a helping hand.

The political outlook in Charlevoix county is very encouraging for the Republicans, and especially for the Republican county ticket. The greenback excitement in this county has reached the maximum of its intensity, and is diminishing. Almost daily we are informed of the return of prodigal Republicans to their first love, and an increasing weariness of hearing the visionary and contradictory speeches of the greenback-softhead office-seekers. Many say the sudden "flop" of the chief orator (?) of the "flattists" from the Republican party into the arms of the greenbackers was not made quick enough. In fact they say it is "too thin." The Republican county ticket will be elected by a majority far greater than is hoped for the state ticket. The only way the Greenbackers can gain votes in Charlevoix county now is to hurry up the election.

P. B. WACHTEL & CO., Bankers, Petoskey, Mich., invite the attention of the public generally to the banking facilities offered for Northern Michigan Foreign and domestic exchange bought and sold. 25-4t

A telegram Saturday to Byron See, of this place, from Milwaukee, announced that his wife had undergone a successful operation upon her eyes and was doing well. Mrs See has been in Milwaukee for some time under the treatment of a skillful oculist.

THE SCHOOL.—On Wednesday, in company with Hon. E. H. Green, we visited our village school, we found the attendance good, and the school prosperous. Prof. Mayne demonstrates an aptness in his teaching which must prove satisfactory to the District. If the school does its part. Mr. Green is an old teacher and a competent judge, and he was highly pleased with his style of teaching. Miss Ainslie's department is also progressing nicely, and everything seems to be satisfactory. If the present status of the school be any evidence, the patrons may rest assured that their children are in good hands.

Irredeemable fiat paper, not backed by a promise to pay in coin, must inevitably be worthless. No man or government has power or ingenuity to make such paper valuable.

The Elections.

GLORIOUS VICTORY FOR THE REPUBLICANS!

Greenbackers Nowhere!

Let every Republican rejoice! The result of Tuesdays elections are of a character greatly to encourage the friends of Republicanism and honest finance. The State of Ohio, which last year gave a Democratic majority of 22,676, is redeemed, and now stand securely in the Republican column, by a majority of 7,000.

The Republicans of Iowa elect the state ticket by over 30,000 majority, which is a gain over last year of over 20,000 when the Republicans had only a majority on the vote for Governor.

The Republicans have gained largely in Indiana and West Virginia.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the election is the insignificant figure cut by the "National" party in Ohio, where they bragged and boasted so much, their vote is reported as not being a vote larger than that of last year—about 27,000 the most of any State. In the other States their vote is scarcely mentioned.

A correspondent writes from Washington that the Chesapeake & Ohio R. R. R. is running between Washington and Blairsburg has just given birth to five children, three girls and two boys, and all of them seven days old. They are now sought but persist in their ungrateful lives live. The mother is out of danger now and is about to receive the congratulations of her friends.

It is estimated that from two to three hundred millions of capital are lying idle in this country, and the Greenback party is mainly responsible for this state of affairs.

The sooner the Greenback Communistic party goes out of existence, the sooner needed capital will be unlocked and the hum of the busy wheel of industry be heard all over the land.

Capital cannot be bought out of its hiding places by threatening it, any more than a squirrel can be coaxed out of a hole in a tree by threatening to beat him with clubs, logs and guns.

Capitalists are not going to send good money to receive their pay in irredeemable trash. If capital cannot have greater protection in this country it will assuredly go to some other, where fiat money abounds and has no support.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that Ayers Cherry Pectoral is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It relieves them all, and thousands of persons who are prostrated to Invalid and Lung Affections, Consumptive Resemblance, Chronic Sore Throat, settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Hamburg Cherry, say: "It is such we write us that cannot doubt, were sold last year without one complaint. An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are today dying from the effects of dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people, is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only obtain simple medicine and skeptics, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Casswell, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

MONEY TO LOAN, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. R. Upright, Charlevoix, Mich. 16 1yr

WHAT better evidence is there of the thrift and growth of Charlevoix than that every carpenter and builder has plenty of work at good wages

THE Record of Supervisors and the Bridges.

The Board of Supervisors at their August session last week appropriated without making provision for the payment of the bonds issued for the bridges for the next year. This appears to be a case of committing the bridge question to a vote of the people at the spring session, and instructed the Co. Treasurer not to pay any of said bonds until they were ratified by the people.

The action on the part of the Board is objectionable. Just what is to be gained by such procedure is not disclosed by the record, nor by any member of the Board.

The Board of Supervisors at their Annual session in October, 1877, voted a sum of money, to be expended in constructing a bridge across Pine River, in the Township of Charlevoix, in consideration of Charlevoix Township assuming independently an additional share of the burden. Charlevoix performed her part of the compact, and under the provisions of the resolution of the Board, the County Treasurer issued and negotiated the bonds, the bridge already having been built.

Now, although the Attorney General of the State of Michigan pronounced these proceedings in accordance with law, we can throw the legal aspects of the case aside, and yet fail to discover wherein lies the policy or economy of this attempted repudiation by the Board at their last session.

A Charlevoix boy for the result of the vote on the question, its effect will be the last on the many which marched up the hill and then marched down again. If the people vote to sustain the action of the Board in voting the money, it will not strengthen the action. If the opposite action result, it will not undo that action, nor destroy the bonds.

But the last action of the Board will exhibit Charlevoix county in all future transactions where credit is sought. A lower claim shows the fire.

The Legislature of Charlevoix county authorized the building of the bridge, and it was built. Legal or illegal, the bonds must be paid by somebody, and that somebody will be Charlevoix county, even if it be with a taxed bill of costs issued under the seal of a United States Court.

Charlevoix Township stands nobly up and bears double its proportion of the burden; and when in the near future the people of the whole county will be called upon to improve its internal navigation principally for the benefit of the eastern portion of the county, again Charlevoix Township will good nobly up and do her full share. We're sorry that a broader and more generous view is not taken of these questions.

THE extreme length of the proceedings of the Board of Supervisors, and the short time left to set them up, forces us to defer their publication another week.

A large and nice assortment of clothing at carpenter & Bartholomew's.

WHY don't our preacher return and extricate Charlevoix from the slough of wickedness and despond incident to the stovepipe season? The fate of Sodom and—and—Gemina will be ours if this think is not stopped!

OUR statement last week that "Greenback speeches and whiskey would not do it in Charlevoix county," has been misconstrued by some. We meant to convey the idea that the speeches and whiskey went together in the interest of a spot in the greenback county ticket pretty near the top end. If any are in doubt as to the meaning of this, there are two more issues before election in which to make it plainer.

Six years ago the Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix county illegally appropriated $1,000 for the improvement of the upper river. The work was done, an interest bearing bond issued and paid without a groan from Charlevoix Township! Who received the benefit from this? Why didn't Charlevoix "murmur" and raise the shed generally. Eh?

A. D. LANGSTAFF, President of the Board Association at Memphis, issued a warning, on the 4th, to refugees, cautioning them against their returning to that city until it should be safer for them to do so. The fate of those who had already returned and been almost immediately taken down with the fever was held up as a warning to other absentees. There were twenty-two deaths in the city during the twenty-four hours ending at six p. m. The deaths in New Orleans during the same time numbered fifty-four; new cases, 293. New cases were reported from several points in Louisiana. A Calvo (Ht.) special to the Chicago Inter-Ocean says two deaths occurred, on the 4th, of suspicious fever, and two cases of yellow fever, and several suspicious cases were on hand.

NEWS was received from Memphis, on the 6th, that the fever had appeared at every point on the line of the Memphis & Charleston Road, and as far as Chattanooga, Tenn., and that effort had been to create a stampede at each of the small towns where even one case of the disease developed itself. There were twenty-three deaths in Memphis, and twelve in the suburbs, during the twenty-four hours ending at six p. m. on the 6th. Nurses were being sent to the smaller towns where needed.

THERE were 205 deaths at Holly Springs, Miss., from yellow fever, up to the 5th. All the citizens in the place but one (the Chairman of the Relief Committee) had had the disease. There was great destitution and much suffering among the people.

FIFTY-NINE deaths occurred in New Orleans during the twenty-four hours ending at noon on the 6th; new cases, 162. Total cases so far, 10,485; deaths, 3,171. The municipal authorities say that there was a general increase of the fever, on the 6th. A telegram was received by collector Smith from the Secretary of War, stating that 40,000 extra rations had been sent forward for the relief of the suffering and needy. This was all that the Secretary could do, and the charitable must be appealed to for further needed help.

A PORT GIBSON (Miss.) dispatch of the 6th says the fever was increasing alarmingly in the country, and a Brownsville (Tenn.) telegram of the same date says the situation there was bad. Similar reports were received from many other localities in Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, etc.

SOME excitement existed in Cairo, Ill., on the 6th, and many families were leaving the city by trains and wagons. Four deaths from black-tongue occurred on that day, and most of the suspicious cases had developed into yellow fever. No new cases were reported on the 6th, and the total number then still did not exceed ten.

THE outlook in the fever districts of the South was still a very gloomy one, on the 7th, a steady increase of the plague being reported from all points. The demand for nurses from the small towns tributary to Memphis exceeded the supply. Forty-eight deaths were reported in Memphis and suburbs, on the 7th, and forty-one in New Orleans. One new case and two deaths were reported in Cairo, Ill.

THE Connecticut town elections occured on the 7th. The returns received at Hartford, up to the morning of the 8th, were meager, but indicated Republican gains. The Greenback vote in Hartford was between 800 and 900, but the Democrats had elected a majority of the town officers.

A Durable Garment.

An agricultural society of Herefordshire, Eng., declined to admit to its exhibition a pair of jet sheep with white faces and black wool, and gave as the reason for rejection the assertion that "the introduction of black sheep would reduce the value of wool." It is certain that black wool is considered less valuable than pure white, and the animal that bears it, is usually deemed the disreputable one of the flock—what in society is denominated "a black sheep." To demonstrate that the popular estimation is wrong, and that black wool is fully as serviceable as white is fast, better for certain purposes—the editor of the Chambers' Journal gives the following testimony in support of a durable garment:

"About twenty years ago, we took a fancy to have an 'Inverness Cape,' a kind of cloak with loose sleeves for the arms, descending from the fleeces of two black-woolled sheep, which browsed daily amidst a flock under our window. We were determined to have seen the manufacture of the wool in its purely natural state would turn out. Accordingly, the fleeces were shorn, washed, carded, spun, and woven by a handloom weaver in our neighborhood, and finally made by a tailor into the required garment. Since that time we have worn it every winter, and as it wrap it always accompanies us on our travels. Shrunked it is, we defy the roughest weather. The cloth is brown, and as bright as the day it was first worn. It cannot change, as might be the case with wool dyed brown. The color is inherent in the substance of the wool; and fifty years hence, if kept so long, it would still be undaled. After making a present of the cloak, there was cloth left sufficient for a lady's jacket, and it has worn equally well. In the caprices of fashion, gentlemen are fond of dressing in rough tweeds, the coarser seemingly the better. We have described a tweed, to call it so, which could undergo any amount of exposure to the atmosphere, and never alter in its original color, even although worn to be threadbare.—N. Y. Weekly.

The Chicago Inter-State Exposition.

Among the notable exhibits at the Exposition now in full tide of successful progress, is the herds of A. & F. Coats, the celebrated Thread Manufacturers, who have made their name a household word for the last three generations. Their sires of great strength, fine strength, durability and finish, cannot be surpassed. It is a pleasure to look upon such specimens of excellence, durability and strength. The award at the Centennial—well, this is enough. "Commended for superior strength and excellent quality of speed cotton." This award was given by the Judges of the United States Centennial Commission, A. T. Goshorn, Director-General.

The New York Agents, Messrs. Anchinloss Bros., have also received a suitable telegram announcing the fact that Messrs. J. & P. Coats have been awarded the medal for their exhibition.

The factories of the firm are established in Pawtucket, in this country, where they employ sixteen or seventeen hundred hands, and in Paisley, Scotland, where Sir Peter Coats, the head of the firm and family resides, and is widely known for his generous philanthropy, which Queen Victoria acknowledged by conferring on him a few years ago. On a short time ago he was as honored guest in Chicago, and by his numerous charities won many friends. It has always been the effort of this firm to secure success by deserving it, and it has been in this way that they have secured such an enviable reputation for the articles they manufacture. The best goods can be made only out of the best material, and, knowing this, the Messrs. Coats use the best Sea Island cotton for their thread. This and the great care used in its manufacture, is what renders "Coats' Spool Cotton" the favorite with the matrons of this country, and enables them to retain their trade against all opposition.

"HOW LONG are you going to stay here?" "Why, my little dear?" "Cause I'm hungry, and mamma says we shall have dinner as soon as that dreadful nuisance goes away."

BABY'S BIRTHDAY.

Golden threshold, leading outward to a world so strange and wide,
And a little figure standing with a timid baby-pride,
Looking through the sunlit Present, to a Future all untried!

Little hands, what will they gather? Little feet, where will they go?
Are there lilies among the blossoms? Are there snares that do not show?
Oh, fair most, that holds its Future! God's sweet blessing curtained low!

Close about the shining threshold cluster loves of purer years,
Knowing well their strength is weakness; smiling sad and sudden tears
As they watch the young life budding—here the bud, and there the fears.

Baby-faith, reach down and help us, since we cannot reach to you
Touch us with the light of Heaven that is nearer to you view,
Seeing how small we are, how strong and how blind!

—Lizzie Harrison, in N. Y. Observer.

THE LIGHTNING-ROD MAN.

A melancholy farmer lost,
With his old gun crammed full of shot,
Was standing by the mission bell.

There rocked in the sultry night-breeze,
Tasted no food or even drink,
Yet 27,752 times he cried "Rats!"

Among the rats, whose ears were nice
Enough to kill ten cents a piece,
Seventy-four small boys studied dictate.

The unarmed farmer, nigh unsane,
Then withheld not his wrath,
The boys peeled low—and none were slain.

Just at this awful time there trod
Up to the farmer with a nod
An agent for a lightning rod.

"Good morning, sir!" he sweetly spake,
"My lightning rod you'll better take;
They are the best; just let me make—"

"I say, now none," the farmer said,
And calmly began straightway his head,
He said the second—and quite dead.

The ladies fattened at this feat;
He picked one up, and smiling sweet,
Presented it, he or was best.

"Now, farmer," said he, oh so sleek,
"Just let a rod then you to-day weak
Your vengeance on the other cheek!"

A GAMBLER'S STORY.

How He Brought Himself and Family to Ruin and Woe.

Gambling, as it exists in St. Louis, has many phases and many hearings. It involves the men who keep the houses, the men who bunco up an unsuspecting victim, the officials who protect it and allow it to prosper. Those who suffer are the players and the ones dependent on them. The proprietors reap the first profit; the officials—well, this is rather a delicate matter. It is intended that nothing unreasonable, malicious or evil shall appear in the Police annual report of the United States Centennial Commission, A. T. Goshorn, Director-General.

The New York Agents, Messrs. Anchinloss Bros., have also received a suitable telegram announcing the fact that Messrs. J. & P. Coats have been awarded the medal for their exhibition.

"I went to work that day with a strong resolution to attend to my duties better; but before night I had met one or two friends and I sold them of my goost luck. They said we must have a spree that night; we did, and after we had got pretty full I loaned $100 to one of the boys to play at faro with, and I went home. It was not a month till my money was all gone and I was hard up as ever. I had lived pretty fast and drank a good deal. I took five dollars and went to try my luck at faro one night. I won $300, and believed I was going to be lucky, as before. But the thing changed. I lost my $300 and my original five dollars, and was glad to get home a sent. went home as miserable a man as ever you saw.

"From that time I began to have all kinds of bad luck, but was continually trying to make a raise at gambling. I went to extremes to get money—used what credit I could get, and borrowed often left my dear wife and little boy without what they really needed. Finally I was driven to such a strait that I pawned my clothes and every thing else that I could get my hands on. I drank a good deal, and one morning I was told that my services were no longer needed. It came like the crack of doom, and I did not know what on earth to do. I went down and got a place in a second-class house, where I did not stay long. From worse to worse it went all the time. I had got a terrible mania for gambling, and I neglected everything for it. Nobody knows how I felt and the misery that was at my house. I went to one of the gambling houses in town and stayed there most all the time, depending on the chances for a living. It was a terrible expense. Half the time I was without a cent of money. One day, I remember, I went and pawned my only coat for two dollars, and sent half of it to my wife with which to get some dinner. I went all day without any cost, and at night made a little raise and went and took it out. I got to be a kind of a hanger-on, and the men who had made hundreds off me had no further use for me. Oh, it was frightful—worse than delirium—almost madness. Tears are nothing—I had no tears; my wife's tears were also dried up. I could have torn myself into a thousand pieces many a time.

"One cruel morning last May I went out on the street and solemnly resolved, by the help of God, I would throw down forever my gambling forever. I was without money and without friends. I sent my poor wife to the country, not, however, till she had pawned some of her jewelry that I had given her when we were married, in order to raise ten dollars. I kept two dollars and gave her the balance. I did not know where the money was to come from. Well, I have struggled along for over a month, and am still alive. I am going to-morrow after mail, and as I am still a young man, I have hopes of making some amends. I tell you there is nothing in gambling. It is the worst fraud in the world. If I can do anything to stop it, I will do it gladly in order to save others.

"I have not told you half my experience; I have lightly skimmed over it. I could not tell you what I have seen and felt. There are plenty of them here in town who can tell you a worse story than this. One thing more I will say, the pretended efforts of the police officials to stop gambling are nothing but a sham. I know how it is and have seen it. The gamblers have it all their own way."

Thus ended the story. The young man who told it lives here in the city, and is well known both to the gamblers and the employees of a prominent dry-goods house.—St. Louis Post.

IT is said that a farmer living near Boise City, Idaho, is doing a brisk business in rabbits. He traps about 400 jack rabbits a day, which are fed to the fogs and make very good pork. The manner of catching the rabbits is as follows: He has three miles of brush fence along which are placed the traps. The rabbits jump over the brush fence and right on the board covering the hole or trap, which board works on a pivot, and after depositing the rabbit in the pit beneath resets itself, ready for another victim. Seven men are employed to do nothing else but run the traps and feed the rabbits to several hundred hogs. The ears are saved, as there is a bounty of two cents per pair—enough to pay all the expenses of running the traps. There seems to be no injurious effects attending the feeding of rabbits to the hogs' stomachs.—California Paper.

THE Burlington Hawk-Eye wants to know why cows always laugh when she meets a milkman. It is difficult to tell. We may only say that, the milkman being an entire stranger, she is decently impolite.—Buffalo Express.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Oct. 17, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

A great deal has been said and written about the overcrowding of the public school buildings in this city, in some of which as many as 400 more than the proper number are daily received. This practice, besides necessarily affecting day to the cause of a serious calamity if not stopped. It came near doing so within the last ten days. In one of the up town schools, containing nearly 2,500 pupils, a little girl was taken with convulsions, and just before losing consciousness she called out the name of her teacher, a Miss Fay. The name was mistaken by some of the other scholars in the room for a cry of "Fire!" which they at once took up and began to run out into the hall. Their cries soon penetrated adjoining rooms, and the panic spread like wildfire. Luckily, the first children who got out of the building and ran up the street still shouting "Fire!" were noticed by the police at a neighboring station, and twenty blue coats hurried to the building and stopped the egress of the frightened flock. On the staircases and on the corridors above the craziest confusion prevailed, and in the class rooms the children clambered over desks and over one another in their efforts to get out. The older teachers were doing all in their power to allay the fears of their pupils, but to no purpose. Police Captain Ward inflated his lungs and ordered the children to their rooms. At first they were reluctant to obey. The most serious objections was made by the older pupils, who implored him to let them out of the building. The Captain was inflexible, however, and backed by his twenty officers was finally obeyed.

In the meantime, however, the rumor that the grammar school was on fire reached the homes of the children, and frantic mothers left their different occupations and hurried over. Before many minutes had passed the street from Eighth to Ninth Avenue was crowded with excited women. Captain Ward appeared on the steps of the building and assured them that everyone was safe. But they would not believe him, and each insisted on entering and satisfying herself by ocular demonstration of the safety of her offspring. This the Captain refused to permit, knowing that it would only revive the confusion and disturb the exercises of the school. Most of the women then went home, but many remained who would not be convinced that the children were safe and sound. At twelve o'clock school was dismissed for recess, and the little ones as they emerged were picked up by their parents and hugged as though the latter had never before realized how dear to them the little ones were.

The injuries resulting from this panic were miraculously few, which is partially accounted for by the fact that the trouble originated on the ground floor, and did not reach the top stories. Had the accident occurred in an upper room, or had the flames actually invaded the building, the thronging of the overcrowded inmates must have resulted in terrible disaster.

One of the Inman steamers, the "City of Chester," which recently arrived in this port was found on unloading to contain in its hold a young Scotchman who had secreted himself as the vessel was about leaving Liverpool, to steal a passage to this country, intending to make his appearance when it should be too late to put him ashore. In his ignorance, however, he took up his quarters in a part of the boat from which, after the cargo was stowed and the hatches fastened, there was no possible escape. In this frightful imprisonment, therefore, the poor fellow remained for the whole eleven days of the voyage without food or water, and when found was barely alive. Thanks to prompt attention and assiduous nursing he is in a fair way to recover. Besides this man the "City of Chester" brought over two other stowaways, who had crawled into one of the lifeboats, and from Monday until Friday lived only upon water, which they sucked by a paper tube from the reserve breakers. On Friday hunger compelled them to crawl out, and they were set at work scrubbing and sweeping.

Harper's Weekly in the last issue has a cleverly drawn cartoon representing Peter Cooper crowning Butler with the air-cushion the former always carries with him to bridge over any hardness of seat he may come across in his business or social haunts. But however brilliant the conception, it is nevertheless a shock to New Yorkers to see Mr. Cooper caricatured. They owe him too much for the good works of days gone by to enjoy seeing him ridiculed. Nast and Keppler are surely tempted to try their skill upon him, for since they have lost Greeley there is no head which a form representing the old [illegible]

The mystery surrounding the death of Annie Degnan, whose body was found in a barrel upon Staten Island recently, is fast being sifted. Reinhart, who has from the first been strongly suspected, narrowly escaped lynching on Wednesday, at the adjourned meeting of the inquest; the fact showing how confident is the feeling that he is the guilty man. There seems to be no loophole for his escape from conviction. He made definite promises to produce the true Annie Degnan, but has failed to keep them. There is something horrible in the idea of a mysterious murder, and it seems to me that the public generally is much more gratified over the discovery of the murderer than at the thought of the scaffold ready for him. A murder which remains a mystery tends to weaken confidence in the strength of our authorities, while the knowledge that the facts will surely be ferreted out, is, as I said, a greater satisfaction than to feel that a man will hang for it.

There are many ills which the greatest wealth cannot avert, and some which it seems especially to invite. Among the latter, such unsparing publicity in regard to the most private details of family life as the Vanderbilt will trial continues daily to involve cannot be considered the lightest by right-minded people. This wearisome, extravagant and disgusting litigation, like Tennyson's Brook "goes on forever." Tedious repetition of humiliating facts about this unhappy family form its staple, and the end is nowhere in sight. The present endeavors of the contestants seem to be concentrated on showing a conspiracy on the part of Wm. H. Vanderbilt with some spiritual mediums to made the Commodore believe that his dead wife had sent him a message from the spirit world, requesting him to make a will in favor of Wm. H. as against the other children. To such lengths are the slighted heirs driven by their love of money.

Stimulated by the shining example of Hughes and O'Leary last week, a lot of amateur pedestrians, twenty-nine in number, started one day this week to walk fifty miles for prizes over the same course. The performance of the professionals looks so easy that many of these doughty amateurs thought they themselves could walk 500 miles also, if necessary, to say nothing of the paltry 50 before them. But the young men found that appearances are sometimes deceptive and most of them dropped out exhausted before twenty miles had been made. Only three kept on and made the full distance.

There was an astonished detective in Westchester yesterday. There had been a dispute about a powder mill, and a man was sent to watch the place for the mill owners. While running his practiced eye over the premises to ascertain the probable worth of the establishment the whole building rose into the air before his startled nose, and disappeared with a bang. No more powder mills for that detective, I'll you please, he says.

RADIX.

About two hundred millions of coin will be added to the circulating medium whenever specie payments are fully resumed.

A Gallean woman has dug up a golden crown and other articles, supposed to have been buried ever since the days of Cyrus, 500 years before the Christian era. The weight of the treasure makes it of the intrinsic value of about $50,000, and no fat about it either.

Colorado is settled by as honest and intelligent people as any part of the west. They know the difference between solid bullion and pasteboard to make dollars of. They have given a handsome majority for the Honest Money party. Three thousand majority in Colorado, on a total vote of about 30,000, is as large in proportion as a majority of 33,000 in Michigan.

It is not true that inflation brings better wages to the laboring men. Larger wages are not necessarily better wages. In 1861 the average pay of skilled labor in this country was $2 a week. In 1864, when the currency was inflated the most, the average was $14.50 a week but that represented only $6.51 in gold, and had not as much purchasing power as the $2 had in 1861. Good money, not cheap money, should be the workingman's motto.

[illegible] low rates of interest as if they should not be higher than the average gain of property or wealth. But would you lease a flock of sheep or stock for a farm at any such rate? Would you lease ten acres to be sowed to wheat for three per cent. of the crop? Why do men borrow money? Do they borrow it for business use where they do not expect to make more than three or five or seven per cent. profit? Not at all. They hire money for a specific use, and the worth of money for profitable uses is what governs the average rate of interest.

When our National bank system was established, the old State banks subsided, and from that day to this no human being ever lost a dollar by taking the currency issued by any National bank. The note of any bank is good in Maine or Louisiana, and so long as the holder knows he holds a genuine note, he does not care what bank issued it, or where it is located. Wild cat banking disappeared under this law and the evils of worthless currency were known no more. Nor is there any monopoly in this excellence. Banking is now free to all men, without regard to race or color—All that is required is that a corporation should be formed and a certain amount of capital furnished.

The point so clearly shown by Secretary Schurz in his recent speech at Cincinnati, that there was no contraction of the currency, but positive inflation, for the five years preceding the panic of 1873, can not be too often presented. There was some contraction of the currency between the years 1865 and 1868. But no panic was the result. Contraction was stopped in 1868, and in 1869 the amount of paper currency outstanding was $693,947,056.61. In 1870 it was $700,375,899 48; in 1871 it was $717,375,751.06; in 1872 it was $738,-570, 993.62; in 1873 it was $750,062,-369.94—that is, the volume had increased over $45,000,000. And yet, on the top of the ascending series, came the panic, with all its terrible consequence. Thus, it appears that years of prosperity followed contraction, and general stagnation followed expansion. Ever after the panic began $31,000,000 was added to the currency without in the least checking its evils.

The following curious document was produced in a New York Court, a few days ago, in an abandonment case:

This is to certify that I, Frank Koehler, give up all claims on Kate Koehler on condition I pay her thirty dollars and agree to support my husband and she can dance again all she likes.

And a Texas editor has been arrested for misappropriating a stolen horse with a horse at one end. Brethren, this seems to be a bad year for editors.—Norristown Herald.

Edwin French, the aged and respected editor of Ohio, whose body was stolen from the grave ten hours after burial by a medical college of Cleveland, "was," it is grimly added, "a friend of the college, and had given a $150." Senator Giles, of Virginia, and Judge Duval, of Maryland, boarded in Washington during Washington's administration, at the house of Mrs. Gibbon, whose daughters were talkative and were not young. Some years after, they met at the capitol, and, while chatting over old Senator Giles was able to whisper, and the parting blow he gives his beaux is no damage to them or consolation to him. A man plowing grassward with two old pings of horses is about as miserable.

Waking Up the Baby.

Just at dusk, the other dismal day, three children, the eldest of whom did not seem over ten years old, were huddled together on the rickety steps of an old house on Bourbion street. A pedestrian passed over their heads to read the number on the door, and the children looked so frightened that he asked:

"Children, where are your father and mother?"

"Father's been gone away off for ever so long, and mother goes out to wash and hasn't got home yet," answered the eldest, a girl.

"And you are all alone?"

"Yes, sir, but baby is on the bed. He's been asleep an awful long time, and we can't wake him up. If we could we'd play hide and seek and let him hid us."

"Is the baby sick?" inquired the man.

"We don't know, sir, but we can't wake him up; I touched him and touched him, and Charley he tickled his feet, but little Sandy never moved once. I guess he is awful sleepy. Don't you think you could wake him up?"

"I'll try," replied the man, as he went in, and when the girl had lighted the lamp he followed her into a bedroom in which there was neither carpet nor furniture. Pushed back against the broken wall was a poor old straw tick and a single quilt. He beat over to look at the child, and the first glance showed him that little Sandy was dead. On the window-sill were some pieces of bread and a cup of milk, which the children intended to feed him. The dead child's hand clasped a rag doll, made of an old calico apron, and its thin, little feet and pale face were evidences that it had known sickness and hunger throughout its brief life. While the children waited for him to open his eyes and romp with them and drive the gloom out of the house, the angels had whispered to him and his eyes had unclosed to behold the splendors of Heaven.

"Won't he wake up?" asked one of the children, standing back in the shadow.

"Children, you must not come in here until your mother comes!" he said, as he left the room.

"Won't he be afraid to wake up in the dark?" I y asked.

"He will sleep a long time yet!" he whispered, not daring to tell them the truth, and as he went out they put the light in on the bedroom floor, that little Sandy might not find the darkness around him when his sleep had ended.

Poor things! They knew not and they could not see the crown of glory on the dead child's brow—a crown whose light all the shadows of earth can never darken in the least.—Detroit Free Press.

A Woman's Life in Germany.

The German mother entrusts her children almost entirely to the nurse's arms. They spend the greater part of the time in the open air, the great place of resort here being the "Promenade," where from early morning until evening may be seen little children, ranging in age from those in swaddling clothes" to those of six and seven years. They are encouraged and made to walk much earlier than American children, and it is, perhaps, owing to this that so many have crooked limbs; for in the short space of time I have been in this country I have seen more bow-legged men and crooked women than I ever saw in America. The several children in charge are oftentimes more interested in the soldiers passing by than in the little ones entrusted to their care. At an early age they are pieced in a "kindergarten" school, and later, if the child should be of the gentler sex, and of well-to-do parents, she is sent to a young ladies' seminary. Here she is instructed notonly in her own language but also in French, English and perhaps Italian; music, drawing and painting are not forgotten; great pains are taken to instruct her in English and German literature, while mathematics and the sciences are neglected or soon dropped. Sewing is taught for fifteen and eighteen she is expected to be confirmed, and of course must, in some measure, prepare herself by studying the catechism, and purchasing a new white dress for the occasion. At this time they also receive presents from parents and friends. The finer gift being generally a watch; this perhaps is an incentive to encourage them to be confirmed at an earlier period than they otherwise would have been; as oftentimes they never attend religious worship except on special occasions. During the season of confirmation it is customary to see young girls, bare headed, arrayed in their white dresses, promenading the streets.

As time passes on the young lady leaves school and enters into society with her mother. It would be deemed improper for a young lady, or even two, to attend any entertainment or visit any place of amusement without being accompanied by a parent or an elderly person; and for traveling alone, that is entirely out of the question. I hardly think they admire the independence of the American girls, especially those who venture to travel the wide Atlantic without a care-taker. If a gentleman should think of choosing a German girl as a companion through life he does not mention the subject to her, but must go to paterfamilias or some married friend, and make them the mediators. If all is satisfactory, he makes her a present of a plain gold ring, and places some of the same kind on his own finger. When all is arranged they proceed to the Mayor's office and inform him of the engagement, when it is registered and announced in the city papers. Printed notices are also sent to friends, and the happy couple appear arm in arm on the street. After the engagement he can see the young lady alone and take her occasionally to the theater or other place of amusement, but before this joyful event he must invite also the mother or the aforesaid married friend. After marriage such lives in a genteel manner independent of the other. The wife manages to have a "coffee clatch" about every week, to which she invites all her lady friends; they bring their needlework, and, sitting around the tea-table from four until half-past seven p. m., indulge in a social cup of coffee and in pleasant conversation. During this period the husband does not venture to put his head inside the door. He takes tea at a late hour, and then adjourns to his favorite resort in town, where he is detained by the fascination of billiards and beer until the "wee small horns" warn him to return. He is really wedded to his billiards and beer, and when at last the other lady comes to court one of them to the final resting-place, early in the morning may be seen a procession of empty carriages headed by a few servant girls carrying baskets of white and green, and followed by the gentleman friends and relatives, who always walk to the cemetery and ride back; the ladies never attend a funeral.

So far I have endeavored to give a short sketch of "Life in Frankfort," which, as everywhere else, is only a "vapor full of woes," and a few steps carry us all hastily from the cradle to the grave."—Frankfort on the Main Cor. Philadelphia Bulletin.

—The earlier grass-lands are top-dressed, in the autumn, the better for the next year's grass. There is no better place for fine manure than grass-land, especially where, in the rotation, the meadow is regularly brought into tillage crops.—Prairie Farmer.

—Peel and bake ripe pears, with but little water. When cold, cover the top and sides with a custard flavored with vanilla, and serve with cream and sugar. This makes a delicate and healthful dessert, and but little time is consumed in its preparation.

Prepare for Winter.

Winter is coming on apace, and those of us who neglect to make our preparations for it, will probably have cause to regret it. We always pay and pay well for any negligence. Sometimes we do not realize that negligence costs us anything, but it does. Every moment has its duties for us to perform, and as time and the wall for no man, if we neglect the duties of a single moment we get behind in our work, violate well-established law, and violated law will avenge itself.

This is an especially proper time to look to the condition of our barns, sheds and other buildings. The business of the summer has prevented this, perhaps, and yet the buildings may need more or less repairs to protect the stock and implements from the inclemency. One severely cold or stormy night may cost more than all the time which may now be required. If animals are allowed to get chilled, it means so much loss of feed, to say the least, and perhaps it means the permanent loss of health to the animal. Economy demands that cows, sheep and swine should have warm beds, and when we have barns and sheds, which only need a few nails and boards to make them comfortable, they should have good shelter. To say that an animal well housed requires less food is simply saying what every reader of this paper knows, and yet this knowledge is not always acted upon. We do not of course mean that no animal shall be kept save only sheltered as to make it tender. We have been known to speak of this danger in former issues; but we mean that proper judgment should be exercised, and the shelter and open air exercise should be provided as such judgment may suggest. We have known a horse to contract the habit of a stable all winter. It would have taken three minutes of time and a half dozen nails to have replaced it. In place of this small outlay, however, the animal consumed many times that value in hay and grain in the endeavor to supply the material to keep up the animal heat, and failed in that in the end. Not only, therefore, was there a loss in the food, but there was loss in flesh, and it was a case where the loss in milk. The proper preparation for winter by way of repairing the barns and sheds is, therefore, the part of wisdom.

It is possible, however, that we may not have the necessary stabling and sheds for the proper accommodation of the stock on hand, and if so it would be convenient if not impossible to erect permanent ones. Still, it is necessary that something of the kind be provided, and unless it can be, we would consult our own interests by getting rid of so much of the stock as we find ourselves unable to provide for in this particular. It is not very difficult, however, very fortunately, to provide shelter on an average farm. If we cannot build a nice barn or erect permanent sheds, we can do the next best thing and construct sheds very cheaply by using the material which we have at hand. We can obtain timber enough often from our own farms, and, if not, from some other, to supply us with all the posts we may need at scarcely any cost; also, for what we may need for the boundaries of the roof, the rafters. It would not be necessary to go to the woods for the timber so used need be fit for nothing else, except, perhaps, firewood, and often may be for that. The posts and rafters once in position, so placed as to make an incline for the better turning of water, make the roof of straw, grass, etc. So far as covering is concerned, such a roof will furnish about as much protection as any roof. Then for sides a double wall can be made, the center of which can be filled with straw, and you have a very good and comfortable shelter for your stock. Prof. Welch, in speaking on this very subject in the Times, says: "Straw is an excellent material for keeping out cold, but it is composed of long, sealed tubes filled with air. It also affords excellent ventilation. A good, tight and quite durable roof may be made of thatch. It is a little remarkable that more attention is not given to making thatch roofs in this country. In most European countries the roofs of cottages as well as of stock-houses are covered with thatch. Native farmers would do well to take lessons from foreign settlers in construction of thatch. The Hollanders especially excel in making thatch roofs. They also make straw fences for poultry-yards that may be rolled up and put down wherever they are wanted. Garden fences and protections for incloures designed for flowers are made of the same material. They also make straw mats for placing in the bottom of wagons and sleighs, in the halls and on the stoops of houses. The Hollanders are very careful of their cattle and other farm stock, and with only such material as scallings, bushes, straw and coarse hay will make excellent provision for them. The Mennonites are also said to be experts in the use of the same material."—Western Rural.

Large vs. Small Farms.

An Illinois correspondent states that one man in his county owns and farms 700 acres of land, and "makes more money than any other seven men who together own an equal area." The latter part of this statement was denied by another correspondent in a succeeding issue of the same paper, the writer taking the position that seven men working for their own individual interests could farm better and make more money on 700 acres than one man could by employing laborer that had no interest in the business.

Now this is a questionable statement, whether the preceding one is or not. One thing is certain, that the man who owns the large farm will have the most profit. In these days of improved machinery, when all the varied labor of the farm is done largely by horse and steam power, the advantage is all with the large farmer who raise grain, as it has always been with the stock farmer. The small farmer can't afford to fit himself out with a complete assortment of the labor-saving machinery. It requires an investment of too much money. The owner of a hundred acres, who buys a mower and reaper, hay rake, horse fork, sulky plow etc.—items what the average farmer regards as indispensable—finds it a severe tax upon his purse. He may have just enough land to cultivate to pay interest on his investment, and not enough to cut, for instance, to justify the purchase of a machine, rake, etc.—but in all this there is no profit.

Improved machinery has reduced grain farming on a large scale, not only possible, but profitable. Twenty-five years ago, when men planted and cultivated everything by the hardest manual labor, the grain farmer found eighty or a hundred acres to be all he could well attend to. But the advent of machinery has changed the conditions. Now, one man, with a team that then stood idle, can accomplish as much in a day as five men could then. We can name thousands of men who count their land by square miles instead of acres, and who have amply demonstrated that grain-farming on a large scale is a most profitable business. Of course, much depends upon the executive ability of the farmer. It requires more of system to run a large farm successfully than it does to manage a factory or store or bank, though of a different kind.

Only one thing appears to be lacking now to make farming on a large scale not only the most profitable, but absolutely necessary, and that is the lack of the steam plow of general adaptation. When this comes, and ten acres can be plowed and prepared for the seed at the same expense one acre is now, the cost of production will have been reduced to such a point, that it will be impossible for the man who uses the common plow to compete with it. What would be profit in the one case would be loss in the other, for with a decrease in the cost of production will come a corresponding decrease in the price of the product. This is exemplified in nearly all the departments of productive industry, where machine labor has almost entirely supersceded hand labor, and we have no reason to suppose that agriculture will prove an exception to the rule.—Practical Farmer.

A Burmese Monkey.

The monkey is not generally popular as a domestic animal, yet I do not fear to assert of the representative of the species which I now have that he is capable of winning the heart of the most unsentimental monkey-hater. Of a mischievous disposition that he cannot be safely transported in India from his warm Southern forests, the little Gibbon monkey may be seen in perfectly happy freedom in the south of Burmah, and when taken young and trained as a home pet, no more engaging animal is to be found. He is not, indeed, free from the mischievous propensities of his kind (and some Gibbons are very mischievous), but they are certainly less obtrusive and are counterbalanced by many attractions. The tiny body is entirely covered with a thick coat of the softest wool, either black or creamy white, out of a fringe of which the beadeleyes peer wistfully; unlike his more plebeian relations, he has no vestige of a tail, and his arms are of immense length in proportion to his body. The grace of his movements, and the suppleness and power of his limbs are absolutely incomplete, carrying him at a giddy pace, with perfect fearlessness and consummate ease, from branch to branch of the loftiest trees, or along the eaves of houses. And when with this beauty and grace are combined the most shy and retiring disposition, the most clinging and affectionate heart, the winning ways and plaintive noises almost of a child, he must have an incurable aversion to monkeys who is not won to affection for the Gibbon. Seen, as I have seen him, set to play with a common-tailed monkey, he is for all the world like a child of an aristocratic family, who, having been reared away from all contact with the world, has been put down by the side of some rude village schoolboy, whose familiarity is as hateful to him as his coarse jests are repulsive and unintelligible.—Figaro's Magazine.

A CENTENARIAN recently called on Mr. John R. Senior, Treasurer of the Bedford Street Mission, Philadelphia, and handed him an envelope containing a contribution to the Mission. He would not give his name, and the Treasurer, too polite to open it in the stranger's presence, waited until he had gone. On opening the envelope, Mr. Senior found five $100 bills and one $500 bill, making $1,000. Thinking there might be some mistake, Mr. Senior ran after the man, and, overtaking him, said: "Why, there's $1,000 in that envelope." "All right, sir; all right. That is what I gave," answered the man. Mr. Senior again asked for his name, that credit might be given, but received the answer: "I have no desire to parade my charity before the world," and the plain-looking man quickly walked off.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—To clean copper vessels, use a coarse cloth; have a pail of very hot water; soap the cloth a little; sprinkle on plenty of pulverized borax, and rub the boiler well; rinse off with hot water and dry with a soft cloth. The boiler can be brightened in this way as quickly as with acid.

—Ventilation of the hen-houses is an important thing to be observed by fowl growers, at all seasons of the year, and especially in the months when the birds are limited to indoor confinement. Foul air in the houses will generate disease rapidly. Roup is thus caused, and sickness will surely crop out among the flock if they do not get fresh air, and plenty of it, at any time of the year.—Rural New Yorker.

—Fine game birds are always heavy for their size; the flesh of the breast is firm and plump, and the skin clear; and if a few feathers be plucked from the breast when the bird is cold, the freshly-killed birds will be fat and fresh-colored; if it is dark and discolored, the game has been hung a long time. The well-cooked and well-served pheasants and woodcock are tender to the touch; the tips of the long wing-feathers of partridges are pointed, the young birds and round in old ones. Quail, snipe and small birds should have full, tender breasts.

—Those who want to know how many times a week to water their window plants can never get an answer. Plants will need more water in a warm room than in a cool one, in a dry atmosphere than one that is moist, when a plant is growing vigorously than when it is at rest, when it is in good health than when it is somewhat sick, and in light, shady earth rather than in stiff or heavy ground. Nothing at all but a little experience will help one, but if there is a true love for the helpless thing it is astonishing how soon the knowledge comes to one. There is no such one but soon becomes a good "plant man."—The Fruit-Grower.

—Although there are many widely different breeds of fowls adapted more or less to certain purposes than another, there are some general rules for their management which are applicable everywhere; and many flagrant errors are made by most farmers. One serious error is, the custom of keeping hens until they become too old to be profitable, because they were choice birds and good layers when young. A hen of any breed will lay only half as many eggs the second year as the first, and the succeeding years she is a boarder kept by a farmer after they are two years old are kept at a loss, as far as paying anything profit is concerned, if she is allowed to run without killing off the old ones and replacing them by pullets, disease is sure to attack them. They become fat, lazy and worthless, and they become aged. If the practice of keeping only pullets is once followed, I am sure that no farmer would ever abandon it.—The Farmer's Friend.

—The Christian Union tells how a fish-chowder should be made, as follows: Put pork in the pot in which the chowder is to be made a few thin slices of nice, sweet, salt pork. Let them fry on the bottom of the pot till brown, then put on a layer of fish (cod or haddock is the best), then a layer of sliced potatoes and onions, another of fish followed by one of potatoes until there is as much as will be required. Use the onions in such proportions as will best suit the taste of all. Sprinkle over salt and pepper, or boil a few pepper; but remember that the salt pork will be almost enough salt for seasoning the soup. When all ready, pour water enough to cover the whole, and let it boil twenty minutes. Just before taking up wet a tablespoonful of flour in some milk—or more, according to the quantity of fish—and pour in to thicken the chowder a little. Put plain bread, or slices of bread, or crackers, round the bottom and sides of the tureen, then dish and serve hot. Clam chowder may be made from this receipt.

Thurlow Weed and the First Steamboat.

As I sailed up the river I recalled an interesting anecdote connected with the early steam navigation of the Hudson. A few summers ago while passing Catskill, the birthplace of Thurlow Weed, on one of the Albany day boats, Mr. Weed, who was like myself a passenger, was reminded of an incident of his boyhood, connected with the first trips of the Clermont, which he related to the little circle gathered around him: "Sixty years ago this very day," said Mr. Weed, "the first steamboat passed up the Hudson from New York to Albany." The news spread like wildfire, although there was then of course no telegraph, and the banks were almost literally lined with people, to whom the first steamboat was a much greater wonder than the Great Eastern to the present generation." To be on the bank, however, was not enough for Mr. Weed; so stripping off his clothes and placing them on a rude raft improvised for the occasion, he swam out into the stream—pushing the raft before him—and from an island (now a part of the main land) he watched in actual fear and trembling the singular and to him weird spectacle.

"A peaceful bark o'er the waters sped,
As this monster from three seas;
From his perilous post the helmsman fled,
And the lasting Captain bade with dread
From her demon-wake to sleep.

"From the fishermen's cabin the inmates hust,
And tales marvel to their ewire to say,
That the ghost of the Dutchman had risen from dust
To smoke their great pipes with a terrible gust,
And hasten from Ostiskan away."

DR. JOHN BULL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single bottle has been sufficient for a cure, and while families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamps on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN C. Vegetine
I Will Try Vegetine.
HE DID
AND WAS CURED.

BELVIDERE, ILL. Feb. 16, 1877.
MR. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—I wish to give you this testimony, that you may know, and let others know, what Vegetine has done for me. About two years ago I was taken with a lame back; it was because a large liver, or breakbeone that I examined the doctor, but I got no relief, and suffered from day to day. I suffered terribly; I could not rest day or night. I had a discharge of matter from my kidneys which was very offensive. I was induced to try Vegetine, and before I had taken one bottle, it did me good. I can truly say I was then encouraged. At this time I was reading over my newspaper; I saw your advertisement of Vegetine, the "Great Blood Purifier" for the cure of Kidney Complaints, certain Diseases, Humors, etc. I said to my daughter Ella, "I will try Vegetine." I got two bottles and took them. I soon got a bottle more, and by the time I had taken three bottles I was entirely cured. I could sleep well all night. I could eat and digest my food. I could now sleep with ease. I recommend Vegetine to all others with great confidence. Vegetine has done for me more than all the doctors and medicine I have taken. Yours truly, ANTHONY BUSH.

Mr. Anthony is one of the pioneers of Swanson, Ill., and settled here in 1854. He is a leading gentleman, of the firm of P. Anthony & Son. Mr. Anthony is extensively known especially among the townships. He is well known to Cincinnati. He is respected by all.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

WHATEVER these political cranks may have tended to create prejudice, or whatever in the political past may have been unfortunate, in connection with the name of the Republican nominee for state Representative in this District, there are certain self-evident truths which weigh heavily in his favor, and should give him a rousing majority at the votes of Charlevoix county. Mr. Wood is many ways is closely identified with the interests of Charlevoix county, and is more thoroughly acquainted with its wants than any candidate before the people. The interest centering in Mr. Wood will acknowledge his ability, and his untiring and undivided attention to public duties. No one doubts that if elected, he will be true to Charlevoix county in any complications which may possibly arise.

STRAY AND THEM.—It is well known in Charlevoix, and is susceptible of the plainest proof, that the Greenback candidate for Clerk and Register was up to and including the day of the late Republican county convention, a Republican, and a candidate for office at the hands of that party. From this we must infer his heart remained true to and for the weal and sorrows of the laboring and agricultural classes. From that hour his soul overflowed with indignation at the thought of the retirement of the Republican party, and his subsequent the United Toothbrushes. From that hour he resolved to devote his time services to the great and glorious National Greenback party. His transition from the Republican party, with which he had associated twenty-one years, to the Greenback party, was the work of a day, and that day was the occasion of the Republican county convention. No comment is necessary.

Men's hats, very cheap at See & Washburn's.

THE GREENBACKERS IN THE WEST.—The desire to pay and no pitch hot! We recently volunteered the editorial opinion that the nomination of P. M. Loveland for County Treasurer was without his knowledge or consent. On Thursday he returned from the East and says he is not a Greenbacker, never was, and has authorized no person to use his name in connection with any office. This reckless act on the part of Mr. Loveland disappoints the Greenback county ticket. It takes the cream all out of it, and the rest of the candidates on the ticket are scratching their heads in chagrin. Loveland was the only name upon the ticket that stood a shadow of a chance of getting even the full Greenback vote. As the ticket remains, we are of the opinion that any person who votes it evidently owes Charlevoix county a grudge that nothing but such an act of recklessness could satisfy. There is not a redeeming feature in it, and it will be the death of the impotent on the 5th of November. Don't you forget it.

If you want anything in the grocery line go to See & Washburn's.

Quite a good many intelligent old time Republicans of this city and vicinity, who embraced the Greenback fallacy last spring, having become reasoned after mature reflection that it is not what they had supposed it to be, have stumped the "Greenback" party, and returned to their first love. Many other thinking men are carefully investigating the money question, and will leave the "Greenback" ranks in due time.—Big Rapids Pioneer Magnet.

The State Capitol is completed and accepted. It will be furnished and ready for occupancy sometime in the month of November.

Correspondence.

CHARLEVOIX, Mich., Oct. 19, 1878.

MR. EDITOR:

THE past political season has been a trouble to a great many of our Republican friends, owing to the question of duty or non-duty attaching in regard to the qualifications for Representative in the Legislature. All the agreed that the Republican candidate gained his nomination through the usual mode of manipulating the conventions and other tricks known to the trade. This question which any honest Republican ought to settle without a moment's hesitation. If you do not wish to be a partner to such tricks, you can at the polls rebuke the trickster. An honest Republicans, wishing to maintain the honor and good name of the party are bound to do it. If we allow a man to force himself upon us by tricks we well deserve the name of blind partisans. Such things and such men are injuring the good name of the party. Several of our old party leaders of this town have made strong efforts to secure their party nomination for office, and being disappointed, have gone over to the party of purity. (?) Others should be given to understand that they, too, can seek pure counsel where they naturally belong. Townships complain that they were cheated out of their representation in county conventions, and counties were cheated of the representative conventions, as in the case of Antrim county, where it took three delegates to disappointed their constituents. But, says one, we must stand by the regular nominees. I say the same; but a nomination obtained through trickery is not regular, and every true Republican should feel it his duty to disapproval upon it. Others may do as they please, but as for me no party lash was ever long enough to lash me into the traces to work for such political shysters; but extend a lash or spur I am free to work for the good of man in Nation, State and county, and that none demands that we call the party of every corrupt man or influence.

YOURS,
ROBERT MILLER.

A new postal accommodation went into effect on the first of October, by which third class matter, such as merchandise, etc., may be registered by the payment of ten cents Register fee. In addition to the one cent per ounce.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in a majority of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons whose predisposition to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Hoxsie's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint, consequently try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, Geo. W. CROUTER.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The results of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence by reason of impurity and sluggishness in the blood. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. CROUTER, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

I take this occasion to state that I have never authorized anyone to present my name as a candidate for any office, and am not a candidate for County Treasurer, of Charlevoix county.
P. M. LOVELAND.
Charlevoix, Mich., Oct. 19, 1878

Now, granting for argument's sake, that the Greenback party can change rule reforms, what can be accomplished in this direction by voting for incompetent, unworthy or undeserving men for county offices? Let every voter do his duty in this direction on Tuesday next.

MILLINERY.—Don't forget to read the new advertisement of Mrs. R. E. Carpenter elsewhere in this issue. Mrs. Carpenter has an establishment that does credit to Charlevoix. She has had larger experience in her business, and her excellent taste has become great. Call and examine her stock.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

A few days ago messengers from Sitting Bull reached Fort Keogh asking for terms for the surrender of that Chieftain and his followers. On the 24th, Gen. Sheridan telegraphed to Gen. Miles that the only terms he could offer were those of unconditional surrender.

About 600 Mormons arrived at New York on the 26th. They are mostly Danes, and started at once for the West.

Two hat-manufacturing firms of New York City entered into an agreement, on the 26th, with the Hatters' Association, to have nothing further to do with convict labor, and that, in the event of any breach in the agreement on the part of the firms, they would pay the Association $10,000 for each infringement. The various shops on a strike in New Jersey were notified at once of this compact.

Sec'y Sherman received an anonymous communication from Boston, on the 27th, inclosing $1,500, to be placed to the credit of the "conscience fund," in the United States Treasury.

On the 26th, the ironclad steamer-coach running between Deadwood and Cheyenne was attacked by road agents and robbed of seven $10,000. The only passenger was killed, and two of the messengers badly wounded.

On the 26th, Thomas Harland, Tilden's attorney in the income-tax case, was arrested on his arrival at Detroit, upon the charge of being privy to the recent larceny of certain account-books which were being examined before the United States Commissioner, at Marquette, Mich. On the following day he was arraigned before a United States Commissioner at Detroit, and gave bail in the sum of $10,000 for future examination.

The Chinese Embassy was formally received by President Hayes, on the 26th ult. The ceremony was private.

Senor Zamacona, the Mexican Minister at Washington, said, on the 26th ult., that the purpose of his Government in sending 5,000 troops to the border was to suppress rafting and all the United States troops in putting down lawlessness.

The United States Treasury held, on the 26th ult., $540,264,000 in United States bonds to secure National Bank circulation, and $15,850,400 to secure public deposits.

Dr. Collier, the chemist of the Agricultural Department, at Washington, has recently been experimenting, on a large scale, in the manufacture of crystallized sugar from cornstalks and sorghum. From 11,237 pounds of the former he secured 2,773 pounds of juice, and from 13,968 pounds of the latter, 4,093 pounds of juice. Cornstalk-juice to the amount of 2,551 pounds yielded 382 pounds of sirup, and 4,355 pounds of sorghum-juice yielded 660 pounds of sirup. This sirup contained 75 per cent. of its weight in sugar. The mill used in these experiments was on the different one, and the sorghum was in small stalks. With a better mill, Dr. Collier thinks farmers may get very much better results 50 per cent. greater than the above. In the cane he says he found crystallized sugar.

About eight o'clock, on the morning of the 26th, the steamer Maryland, running between Norwalk, Conn., and New York, left her dock at the former city. When about one mile out her boiler exploded, tearing a hole in her port side about twenty feet square. She had 200 passengers on board, of whom ten were killed and about twenty more or less injured.

During September, there were thirty failures in New York City, with liabilities aggregating $4,367,573, and assets, $2,010,417.

O'Leary, the Chicago pedestrian, and John Hughes, of Newark, N. J., started on a six days' walking contest in New York City, on the night of the 28th ult., for $500 and the champion belt.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

The death of Dr. Kilroe, the inventor of the fever cot, who went to New Orleans to introduce and test his system of cold-water treatment of fever patients, was announced on the 24th. Revaluations in this remedy, which failed in his case, although it is said to have resulted successfully with other patients.

William Rockwood, President of the Howard Association of Fayette, died, in that city, on the 26th. His death-bed scene was one to have very touching. He died on the field of honor and duty, and many of the public buildings and private dwellings were draped in mourning because of his loss, which loss was sadly felt by all.

Secy-or-War McCrary stated, on the 26th, that he was advised that the Howard Association had on hand, unexpended, a balance probably sufficient for their wants at New Orleans and Memphis. He thought the Association perfectly reliable, and had ordered no investigation. At all afflicted points save New Orleans and Memphis suffering and want were great, and, he thought, increasing, and even in those cities more help might be required in the near future. The people could scarcely go amiss in sending further aid.

A dispatch from Vicksburg, on the 27th, says the death-rate at Greenville, Miss., had been horrible in the extreme. Out of a population of 400 people, 219 had died up to the 26th, and there were only fifteen persons in the place who had escaped the fever so far. Mr. Perry's family of eleven persons, and three nurses who were in attendance upon them, all died within a few days of each other. The deaths occurred so rapidly in that town that it was impossible to bury the bodies properly, and they had to be covered with earth in shallow holes. To prevent the citizens of the place from seeking safety in flight the people in the country blockaded the roads and destroyed the bridges over the streams, but this had not prevented the spread of the fever through many portions of the country.

A dispatch from Henderson Landing was received at Vicksburg, on the 26th ult., appealing for physicians, nurses and ice. The people were helpless. Two deaths had occurred that morning, and not less than fifteen persons were then down with the fever.

The New York Committee on the Collection of Clothing for the Yellow-Fever Sufferers issued a strong appeal, on the 26th ult., for clothing. The members speak in great earnestness of the sufferings which the survivors throughout the infected districts must endure as soon as frosts appear.

A number of refugees, who had prematurely returned to Vicksburg, were down with the fever on the 22th ult. Some of them were attacked as soon as they reached their homes in that city. A special to the Chicago Tribune states emphatically that it is wrong for planters so to return to any of the fever-infected towns until after several killing frosts. The Tribune suggests that those families or persons from the South who are sojourning in Northern towns, and are in need of pecuniary help, should receive aid from the fund raised for the South, thus enabling them to stay away from their homes until all danger is over.

Several contributions were received, on the 30th ult., to assist in loading a steamer at St. Louis with supplies for the yellow-fever sufferers at the settlements along the Mississippi River.

The fever was still spreading, in many of the smaller towns in Louisiana and Mississippi, on the 30th ult. The reports from New Orleans, Memphis and Vicksburg were somewhat encouraging, although the disease was finding new victims in the persons of returning refugees. A Memphis telegram says the fever there had assumed a milder form, and yielded quite readily to treatment. There were many indications of a revival of business in Vicksburg. The excitement in Cairo, Ill., had subsided, and absentees were returning to the city. The public schools in that place opened on the 30th ult.

FOREIGN.

John M. Woodworth, Surgeon-General of the United States Hospital Marine Service, issued a circular, on the 30th ult., in which he details the preliminary efforts to secure Commission to investigate the yellow-fever question—as to the origin, etc., of the disease. He states that Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, the noble lady of New York, having offered to contribute sufficient means to meet the expenses of the proposed Commission, he had appointed Prof. S. M. Bemis, M. D., of New Orleans, Jerome Cochran, M. D., of Mobile, and a third member, whose acceptance had not yet been received, to act as such Commission. Should contributions be sufficient, or Congress so direct, two or three scientific experts will subsequently be attached to the Commission. George W. Riggs, of Riggs & Co., bankers, Washington City, had consented to act as Treasurer to receive and disburse the additional funds which may be contributed for the expenses of the Commission.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

The National Executive Committee of the Union League of America held a meeting at Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 24th, at which a resolution was adopted in favor of a currency convertible on demand into coin, and pledging the efforts of the committee to promote the election of those candidates only who stand on such a financial platform. President Hayes, who was in the city, was present at the meeting for a short time, and was received with great enthusiasm.

The Nevada Democratic State Convention met, on the 23d, and adopted a hard-money platform, advocating the removal of all restrictions upon the circulation of silver. The following nominations were made: Governor, L. R. Bradley (present incumbent); Lieutenant-Governor, J. M. Adams; Member of Congress, W. E. P. Deal.

The Republicans of Connecticut held their State Convention, at Hartford, on the 24th, and nominated Charles R. Andrews for Governor, David Galler for Lieutenant-Governor, David Torrence for Secretary of State, Tallman Baker for State Treasurer, and Chauncey Howard for Comptroller. The platform adopted declares the Government bonds and legal-tender notes to be sacred debts, to be paid to the last dollar in the standard money of the world; demands that all currency shall be kept at par with the gold standard of the world, and expresses faith in the integrity and patriotism of President Hayes.

The President arrived at Washington from his Western trip, on the 28th, and was soon thereafter in separate conference with members of his Cabinet. He is said to have expressed himself as being much pleased with his reception, both public and private, at the different points along his recent journey to and from the Northwest.

The Democratic State Convention of Massachusetts met at Faneuil Hall, in Boston, on the 25th, pursuant to the adjournment ordered by the State Executive Committee at Worcester. J. G. Abbott was nominated for Governor by acclamation, W. H. Plunkett for Lieutenant-Governor, H. C. Dewing for Secretary of State, D. N. Skilling for State Treasurer and Receiver, J. E. Fitzgerald for Auditor, and Richard Olney for Attorney-General. After denouncing the Republican party for its alleged disregard of the admitted rights of States and of the people, etc., the resolutions adopted declare that the Democratic party has ever been the trusted friend of the laboring classes, and demand the enactment and execution of such laws as shall protect the rights of labor as well as those of capital; that the total amount of currency authorized should be fixed by law and redeemable at any moment in coin, should be receivable for public dues as its face value, and that all coin of the same denomination shall be nearly as possible of equal value.

The New York Republicans met in State Convention at Saratoga, on the 26th, and organized by the selection of Hon. Roscoe Conkling as Permanent Chairman. Hon. George F. Danforth was nominated for Judge of the Court of Appeals. The platform adopted demands that the creditors in respect to the payment of the National debt be accurately observed; favors specie resumption and making greenbacks of equal value with coin, declares that all parties are bound to abide by the decision of the Electoral Commission; warns the people to be vigilant in opposing Southern claims: insists upon free and uninterrupted elections in the South; favors rational Civil-Service reform; arraigns the dominant forces of the Democratic party as constant disturbers of the public tranquillity and the Public peace, etc., etc.

The New York Democracy met in State Convention at Syracuse, on the 25th, and, after some contention over the question of delegates from New York and Kings County, Committees on Credentials and Resolutions were appointed, and an adjournment was had to the next day. After reassembling, on the 26th, Erastus Brooks was chosen Permanent Chairman. G. B. Bradley was nominated for Judge of the Court of Appeals, on a platform reaffirming the principles set forth in the platforms of 1874 and 1877, that gold and silver coin, and a paper currency convertible into coin at the will of the holder, should be the only currency of the country, and that steady steps be taken toward specie payments and the ultimate payment of the public debt; declaring in favor of a tariff for revenue; no Government partnership with protected monopolies, etc., etc.

The New Hampshire State Prohibition Convention is to be held at Nashua, on the 25th of October.

The Democratic State Convention of Nebraska was held at Lincoln, on the 26th, and adopted a soft-money platform, and nominated John D. Howe (also on the Greenback ticket) for Supreme Judge; Alexander C. Bear for Congress, short term; A. W. Davis (on Greenback ticket) for Congress, long term; J. R. Webster for Governor; F. J. Mead for Lieutenant-Governor; John Farmer, Jr., for Secretary of State; E. H. Benton for Auditor; F. H. Cummings for Treasurer; S. H. Calhoun (on Greenback ticket) for Attorney-General.

An Interesting Legal Decision.

Two advertisements of Master's sale were published in the Dover, N. J., Index. On the day of the sale the defendants protested against it, declaring that the sale was not legal, the notice thereof having been published in a newspaper using a "patent outside." The Master ordered the sale to take place. The defendants filed a petition in chancery to set aside the sale, alleging the reasons given above. The petition raised the issue as to whether a newspaper using a "patent outside," printed outside the State, was a newspaper printed in the State in which legal notices might be legally advertised. The following is a true copy of the decision of Chancellor Runyon and Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet, and very clearly settles the question relative to the legality of such advertising:

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

Between

Julius Hairbottle, Petitioner, and

The National Union Bank, of Dover, N. J., Defendant.

On Petition to set aside Sale.

Upon petition filed in this Court, by the above stated petitioner to set aside a sale made in pursuance of the commands and directions contained in a certain writ of fieri facias for sale of mortgaged premises, lately issued out of this Court, in a certain cause wherein the National Union Bank of Dover, New Jersey, was complainant, and Julius Hairbottle and others were defendants, because the advertisement of said sale was ineffective and not in compliance with the statute in such cases made and provided, for certain reasons in said petition set forth, and upon the Court having examined the said petition and the facts therein stated to be true, and upon the affidavits of the petitioners, and being fully advised in the premises, it is considered by the Court that the advertisement of said sale was legal and sufficient, and was held and made and is valid in compliance with the statutory requirement. It is, therefore, on this twentieth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, ordered and directed by his Honor, Theodore Runyon, Chancellor of New Jersey, that the prayer of said petition be denied and the said petition be dismissed.

Theodore Runyon, Chancellor.

A Woman With New Shoes.

When a woman has a new pair of shoes sent home she is always slightly or different from a man. She never shoves her toes into them and yanks and hauls like a boy. She puts the face and all out of breath and then goes stamping around, but pulls them on part way carefully, twitches them off and looks at the heel, and when she has got the right one, pulls them on again, looks at them dreamily, says they are just splendid, takes another look, stops suddenly to smooth out a wrinkle, twists around and surveys them sideways, exclaims "Mercy, how loose they are!" pulls them on again square in front, works her foot around so they won't hurt her quite so much, takes them off, looks at the heel, the toe, the bottom and the inside, puts them on again, walks up and down the room once or twice, remarks to her better half that she won't have them at any price, tilts down the mirror so that she can see how they look, turns in every possible direction and nearly dislocates her neck trying to see how they look from that way, back of, steps up again, takes thirty or forty farewell looks, says they make her feet look awful big and never will do in the world, puts them off and on three or four times more, asks her husband what he thinks about it, and then pays no attention to what he says, goes through it all again, and finally says she will take them. It's a very simple matter, indeed.—Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

There are some scenes almost too pure and refined to be viewed by the thoughtless world. One of them is a two-hundred-pound woman with a mole on her chin "talking baby" to an ounce-and-a-half canary bird in a brass cage.—Rockland Courier.

AT LAST.

Upon the earth a pilgrim wandered slowly
In search of treasures hid from mortal sight,
Yet grateful made those where love threw wide lowly,
Whose faith was infinite.

He had his visions, full of life and sweetness,
That opened like a flower in his soul,
And basic him hope for splendor and completeness now
When he attained the goal.

He stretched his hand to pluck a dainty blossom
That oughts a wealth of impiness in part,
But when he pressed it closely to his bosom
The thorn pierced through his heart.

Still young and hopeful, fen though fate was cruel,
He firmly walked across the desert sand,
Joy sparkling in his eyes at one bright jewel
That glittered in his hand.

Lo! at his touch, the gem, erewhile unfolding
A wealth of life and color, gloomed away
In swift recluse, and left the pilgrim holding
A worthless bit of clay.

"Since Love and Joy," he said (poor, patient pilgrim!)
"Is me the blessedness of bliss deny,
I can but wait, and so shall reach the capital
Where Peace dwells, by and by."

He journeyed on until the day declining
Brought him at last the pearly gates anear;
And on his face was seen the glory shining
From a celestial sphere.

The goal is reached! The door of Heaven unclosed;
Earth's fetters broken and
And soon the housesick, lonely one resumes
Its the embrace of Death.

From all the disappointments and denials
That were his bitter portion in the past,
From all life's cares, anxieties and trials,
He has found Rest at last!

Weep not that mortal has become immortal;
Grieve not that death ended in the mystical ones;
Mourn sheneh ony through sinful, gloomy period;
Death is the gate of Life!

JOHN, JUN.

John Basil Ximines, Great merchant, of Mincing Lane, London, was in trouble. Not financial trouble, for the old house stood on a firm foundation; and no one knew it better than Sam Postlethwaite, confidential bookkeeper of the firm, and the trusted friend of Old Ximines himself. Therefore, when he saw John Basil in so anxious a mood, he resolved to know and to relieve his annoyance.

"Master," he said, "you're in trouble. What is it?"

"John, Jun.," was the prompt reply. "It has taken the bottom out of everything, and it comes to the office grumbles and blunders till we are glad to see him leave things. You know it's so, Sam."

"John, Jun., wants an object to work for, sir. If he thought the firm was in trouble now, he would be full of energy and interest. No doubt of it, sir."

"He has lost interest in everything; hunting, yachting, shooting, travel, everything is a bore."

"Any lady in the case?"

"There is a governess at Sir Thomas Dakes' I don't like—a tall girl with red hair, and a wonderful figure and color."

"Why don't you like her?"

"She is poor, beside. John is to marry Leanora Zelton."

"Then I'm glad nothing else from this quarter. Miss Zelton is a good match. He let Leanora's governess read it, for John knew that she would talk about it, and he was quite aware that women admire men who carry great trusts, and are of importance in the world. And the governess, in return for the compliment, was very kind that last afternoon to the lovers, so that they found plenty of opportunities to be together those few sweet moments allotted that mean so much. In fact, they parted as plighted lovers, and John went back to London with a new sense of his own importance, and a very happy man.

Sam looked at him queerly. "The country has done you a deal of good, Mr. John," he said.

"Yes, Sam; I think I shall run down every Saturday. I found the gardens quite out of order. I can come back Monday."

"Yes, you can," answered Sam, doubtfully.

The justice of Sam's "can" was soon proved. John went to the country very punctually Saturday mornings, but Sam had generally to write an urgent letter Monday or Tuesday to get him back to business again, and at the end of the summer he thought it well to notice this.

"I should think, Mr. John, the gardens are in order now, and I don't see that you can be spared every week now. Business is very brisk again."

"Sam, I'll work till midnight if you wish, but I must go to the country Saturday."

"Then, Mr. John, it is not flowers that is taking you."

"Well, Sam, it is not. It is the loveliest little lady in the world—Leanora Zelton."

"Mr. John! What ever will your father say? And Old Zelton! You know how ugly he was about that cargo of currants."

Next Saturday John went to the country, but he did not see Leonora. Her father had discovered her engagement, and had threatened to send her to a German convent. The governess was full of grief, and could not conceive how Mr. Zelton had found all out. John remembered Sam—but that was impossible: Sam and Old Zelton hardly spoke civilly to each other; besides, Sam had not the remotest sympathy with Leanora and him. It could not be Sam. But he went back sorrowfully to London, and told Sam that Leanora was to be sent away from him.

"I should not stand it, Mr. John," said the old clerk; "I should ask her to marry me, and take her away myself."

"But you say the business can't afford me more than £900 a year, Sam?"

"And if you love each other, and can't live on £800 a year, you don't deserve to live at all. Take a little house in a quiet neighborhood, and ask her to come and share it with you."

John's advice just pleased the eager lover. He was for taking it at once, and Sam did not oppose him, though John might have wondered if he had seen the face that followed his footsteps. "The lesson is pretty nearly learned," he muttered. "It takes an old bachelor like me to bring up a young man properly," and the good fellow dipped his pen in his ink with a self-satisfied chuckle.

John returned in high spirits. Leanora was an augel, she was willing to be his wife, no matter how humbly they must begin. She was coming to London next day on a visit to her aunt, and would meet him in St. Pancras Church next Saturday morning. He would have a special license by that time, and Sam could be witness.

Sam said of course he could. But Sam had no idea of doing such a thing. He put on his hat soon after and went to Alexander Zelton's office. The two men did not meet like those who have a chronic quarrel about consignments, but like old friends. They clasped hands, and went together into an inner room, from which soon came sounds of pleasant good-fellowship. Then Sam telegraphed to John Basil Ximines, in Mincing Lane: "Send for John, Jun., immediately."

After this piece of business, Sam was very busy all day, and kept John by his side. They were eating a late dinner together, when a telegram was brought to Sam, which he quietly passed over to John: "Very important. Mr. John Ximines, Jun., wanted in Zante at once."

"What am I to do about Leanora, Sam? What am I to do?"

"Write to her, and go to Zante at once; there is nothing else to be done." Sam's face was so impassive John ser resistance was useless; and indeed Sam was so urgent that he found himself by midnight on the way to Greece.

"Very important" his journey might be to the house of Ximines, but very miserable for himself. John felt it. Indeed, he was so evidently wretched that his father hurried back to London with his son as soon as possible. But when they arrived John found that the Zelotons were in France, and would not return till Christmas. There was nothing to do but wait and hope, and he was encouraged by the fact that the houses of Zelton and Ximines had lately had very large transactions together.

Sam drew attention first in this circumstance, and advised John, Jun., to make a confidant of his father, who could then ask Old Greek to make inquiries for the hand of his daughter. This was three days before Christmas, and the letter was sent upon the 23d of December. Before the Ximineses could receive any answer to it, a letter from Zelton, sire dated on the 23d, came to John Basil, saying: "Our lands join, our business is intimately connected; why should not our families be happy together? Come and spend Christmas at Zelton Hall."

The invasion, therefore, was as mutual as if it had been so arranged, and Sam talked a great deal about this wonderful unanimity of feeling. But John, Jun., was too happy to have any suspicions, and this happy Christmas visit was only the prelude to that grand wedding which took place three months afterward in St. George's famous Church, and when the handsome Anglo-Greek bride and bridegroom were the theme of every tongue.

"A very suitable wedding, indeed," said the magnates of Mincing Lane—"unites two fine estates and two old firms."

"A very handsome, loving couple," said John Basil to Sam; "and it is your doing, old friend."

"Yes," said Sam, cheerily, "it is my doing. I have made a good merchant and a good match."—Harper's Weekly.

Disraeli's Devoted Wife.

Disraeli's name is on every tongue just now, but how many know of the rare devotion of his wife, who, though fifteen years his senior, loved him with the tenderest affection equalled, cheered, consoled and encouraged him in defeat, and partook of his joy and exultation in success? It was his habit to prepare his speeches with great care, to study them closely, and, just before leaving home for the House of Commons, to read them through for the last time. After this final reading, during which he became utterly absorbed with his topic, he never wished to be spoken to, feeling that any interruption would disturb and disarrange the current of his thoughts. When the hour for starting came, he would go silently to his carriage, his wife taking a seat by his side, but neither uttering a syllable. Arrived at the House, she, who never missed hearing him speak, would go to the gallery set apart for the wives of members, while he would make his way to his place and there remain unobserved until the time for his speech arrived. That over, he went directly to the gallery to receive his wife's congratulation and applause, dearer to him than that of the hundreds of adherents who hung upon his words. On one occasion, just as the pair were leaving home, when the footman closed the door of the brougham, the lady's finger was caught and held. The pain was excruciating, but no token of suffering escaped her. In silent agony she rode to the House, went to her accustomed seat in the gallery and listened to her husband's speech, and it was not until he came to her, after it was over, that he knew of the accident. We may smile at this over-strained heroism, but we must respect the woman who preferred to suffer rather than risk her husband's success.—Cor. Boston Transcript.

—Gen. Longstreet has been appointed an Internal Revenue Agent. He is said to be in desolate circumstances.

—Anna Davis, a plucky little girl of Northboro, Mass., has started for Bangkok, Siam, by way of San Francisco and Hong Kong, to meet and marry her lover, a printer.

—Tennyson is an incessant smoker. He uses a clay pipe of the old fashion, with a stem a yard long, and smokes common Virginia pigtail tobacco. He never uses a pipe the second time.

—An old lady in Middlebury, Wis., recently crossed over a bridge marked "dangerous" without seeing the sign. On being informed of the fact on the other side she instantly remarked: "Then I'm glad I'm safe!"

—When they offer a prize on the homeliest woman in America I'm going up to the head of the class like a fourhoss team! Whur's the jedges?"

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

A FEW days ago messengers from Stirling Bull reached Fort Keogh asking for terms for the surrender of that Obdelatin and his followers. On the 24th, Gen. Sheridan telegraphed to Gen. Miles that the only terms he could offer were those of unconditional surrender.

ABOUT 600 Mormons arrived at New York on the 30th. They are mostly Danes, and started at once for the West.

TWO HAT-MANUFACTURING firms of New York City entered into an agreement, on the 26th, with the Hatters' Association, to have nothing further to do with convict-labor, and that in the event of any breach in the agreement on the part of the firms, they would pay the Association $10,000 for each infringement. The various shops on a strike in New Jersey were notified at once of this compact.

SHE'S SHERMAN received an anonymous communication from Boston, on the 27th, inclosing $1,500, to be placed to the credit of the "conscience fund," in the United States Treasury.

ON the 26th, the Ironclad treasure-coach running between Deadwood and Cheyenne was attacked by road agents and robbed of about $40,000. The only passenger was killed, and two of the messengers badly wounded.

ON the 26th, Thomas Harland, Tilden's attorney in the income-tax case, was arrested on his arrival at Detroit, upon the charge of being privy to the recent larceny of certain account books which were being examined before a United States Commissioner, at Marquette, Mich. On the following day he was arraigned before a United States Commissioner at Detroit, and held to bail in the sum of $10,000 for future examination.

THE Chinese Embassy was formally received by President Hayes, on the 28th ult. The ceremony was private.

SENOR ZAMACONA, the Mexican Minister at Washington, said, on the 28th ult., that the purpose of his Government in sending 5,000 troops to the border was to suppress raffling and aid the United States troops in putting down lawlessness.

THE United States Treasury held, on the 28th ult., $340,594,000 in United States bonds to secure National Bank circulation, and $13,850,400 to secure public deposits.

DR. COLLIER, the chemist of the Agricultural Department, at Washington, has recently been experimenting, on a large scale in the manufacture of crystallized sugar from cornstalks and sorghum. From 11,267 pounds of the former he secured 3,773 pounds of juice, and from 13,668 pounds of the latter, 4,960 pounds of juice. Cornstalk-juice to the amount of 2,571 pounds yielded 383 pounds of syrup, and 4,355 pounds of sorghum-juice yielded 660 pounds of syrup. This syrup contained 25 per cent. of cane-sugar in sugar. The mill used in these experiments was also a different one, and the sorghum was in small stalks. With a better mill, Dr. Collier thinks farmers may rely upon results 50 per cent. greater than the above. In these cases he got a good crystallized sugar.

ABOUT eight o'clock, on the morning of the 28th, the steamer Adelphi, running between Norwalk, Conn., and New York, left her dock at the former city. When about one mile out her boiler exploded, tearing a hole in her port side about twenty feet square. She had 300 passengers on board, of whom ten were killed and about twenty more or less injured.

DURING September, there were thirty failures in New York City, with liabilities aggregating $4,307,072, and assets, $2,701,417.

THE Dime Savings Bank of Hartford, Conn., suspended, on the 30th ult. Its deposit account is $486,975.

O'LEARY, the Chicago pedestrian, and John Hughes, of Newark, N. J., started on a six days' walking contest in New York City, on the night of the 29th ult., for $500 and the champion belt.

YELLOW FEVER NEWS.

THE death of Dr. Kibbee, the inventor of the fever cot, who went to New Orleans to introduce and test his system of cold-water treatment of fever patients, was announced on the 24th. He submitted to his own remedy, which failed to his case, although it is said to have resulted successfully with other patients.

WILLIAM ROCKWOOD, President of the Howard Association of Vicksburg, died, in that city, on the 26th. His death-bed scene is said to have been very touching. He died on the field of honor and duty, and many of the public buildings and private dwellings were draped in mourning because of his loss, which was sadly felt by all.

SEC'Y-OF-WAR MCCRARY stated, on the 26th, that he was advised that the Howard Association had on hand, unexpended, a balance probably sufficient for their wants at New Orleans and Memphis. He thought the Association perfectly reliable, and had ordered no restriction. Atall efficient points save New Orleans and Memphis suffering and want were great, and, he thought, increasing, and even in those cities more help might be required in the near future. The people of Louisiana could scarcely go amiss in sending further aid.

A DISPATCH from Vicksburg, on the 27th, says the death-rate at Greenville, Miss., had been horrible in the extreme. Out of a population of 400 people, 219 had died up to the 26th, and there were only fifteen persons in the place who had escaped the fever so far. Mr. Perry's family of eleven persons, and three nurses who were in attendance upon them, all died within a few days of each other. The deaths occurred so rapidly in that town that it was impossible to bury the bodies properly, and they had to be covered with earth in shallow holes. To prevent the citizens of the place from seeking safety in flight the people in the country blockaded the roads and destroyed the bridges over the streams, but this had not prevented the spread of the fever through many portions of the country.

A DISPATCH from Henderson Landing, was received at Vicksburg, on the 28th ult., appealing for physicians, nurses and ice. The people were helpless. Two deaths had occurred that morning, and not less than fifteen persons were then down with the fever.

THE New York Committee on the Collection of Clothing for the Yellow-Fever Sufferers issued a strong appeal, on the 28th ult., for clothing. The members speak in great earnestness of the sufferings which the survivors throughout the infected districts must endure as soon as frosts appear.

A NUMBER of refugees, who had prematurely returned to Vicksburg, were driven with the fever on the 29th ult. Some of them were attacked as soon as they reached their homes in that city. A special to the Chicago Tribune states emphatically that it is wrong for Associations to return to any of the fever-infected towns until after several killing frosts. The Tribune suggests that those families or persons from the South who are sojourning in Northern towns, and are in need of pecuniary help, should receive all from the fund raised for the South, thus enabling them to stay away from their homes until all danger is over.

SEVERAL contributions were received, on the 30th ult., to assist in loading a steamer at St. Louis with supplies for the yellow-fever sufferers at the settlements along the Mississippi River.

THE fever was still spreading, in many of the smaller towns in Louisiana and Mississippi, on the 30th ult. The reports from New Orleans, Memphis and Vicksburg were somewhat encouraging, although the disease was finding new victims in the persons of returning refugees. A Memphis telegram says the fever there had assumed a milder form, and yielded quite readily to treatment. There were many indications of a revival of business in Vicksburg. The excitement in Cairo, Ill., had subsided, and absentees were returning to the city. The public schools in that place opened on the 30th ult.

JOHN M. WOODWORTH, Surgeon-General of the United States Hospital Marine Service, issued a circular, on the 30th ult., in which he details the preliminary efforts to secure a Commission to investigate the yellow-fever question—as to the origin, etc., of the disease. He states that Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, a noble lady of New York, having offered to contribute sufficient means to meet the expenses of the proposed Commission, he had appointed Prof. S. M. Bemis, M. D., of New Orleans, Jerome Cochran, M. D., of Mobile, and a third member, whose acceptance had not yet been received, to act as such Commission. Should contributions be sufficient, or Congress so direct, two or three scientific experts will subsequently be attached to the Commission. George W. Riggs, of Riggs & Co., bankers, Washington City, had consented to act as Treasurer to receive and disburse the additional funds which may be contributed for the expenses of the Commission.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE National Executive Committee of the Union League of America held a meeting at Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 24th, at which the resolution was adopted in favor of a currency convertible on demand into coin, and pledging the efforts of the committee to promote the election of those candidates only who stand on such a financial platform. President Hayes, who was in the city, was present at the meeting for a short time, and was received with great enthusiasm.

THE Nevada Democratic State Convention met, on the 25th, and adopted a hard-money platform, advocating the removal of all restrictions upon the circulation of silver. The following nominations were made: Governor, L. R. Bradley (present incumbent); Lieutenant-Governor, J. M. Adams; Member of Congress, W. E. E. Beal.

THE Republicans of Connecticut held their State Convention, at Hartford, on the 24th, and nominated Charles R. Andrews for Governor, David Gallet for Lieutenant-Governor, David Torrence for Secretary of State, William Baker for State Treasurer, and Chauncey Howard for Comptroller. The platform adopted declares the Government bonds and legal-tender notes to be sacred debts, to be paid to the last dollar in the standard money of the world; demands that all currency shall be kept at par with the gold standard of the world, and expresses faith in the integrity and patriotism of President Hayes.

THE President arrived at Washington from his Western trip, on the 25th, and was soon thereafter in separate conference with members of his Cabinet. He is said to have expressed himself as being much pleased with his reception, both public and private, at the different points along his recent journey to and from the Northwest.

THE Democratic State Convention of Massachusetts met at Faneuil Hall, in Boston, on the 25th, pursuant to the adjournment ordered by the State Executive Committee at Worcester. J. G. Abbott was nominated for Governor by acclamation, W. H. Plunkett for Lieutenant-Governor, H. C. Dewing for Secretary of State, D. N. Skilling for State Treasurer and Receiver, J. E. Hurgerall for Auditor, and Richard Olney for Attorney-General. An Interesting Legal Decision.

TWO advertisements of Master's sale were published in the Dover, N. J., Index. On the day of the sale the defendants protested against it, declaring that the sale was not legal, the notice thereof having been published in a newspaper using a "patent outside." The Master ordered the sale to take place. The defendants filed a petition in chancery to set aside the sale, alleging the reasons given above. The petition raised the issue as to whether a newspaper using a "patent outside," printed outside the State, was a newspaper printed in the State in which legal notices might be legally advertised. The following is a true copy of the decision of Chancellor Runyon and Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet, and very clearly settles the question relative to the legality of such advertising:

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

Between

JULIUS HAMMERLE, Petitioner, and

THE NATIONAL UNION BANK of Dover, N. J., Impleaded.

On petition to set aside Sale.

The petition filed in this Court by the above stated petitioner to set aside a sale made in pursuance of proceedings and decree contained in a certain writing of Levavi facias de bonis, etc., issued out of this Court, in a certain cause wherein the above named The National Union Bank of New Jersey was complainant, and Samuel Goss and others were defendants, coming on for argument on said petition and the same having been argued by counsel of the petitioner and by counsel of the said National Union Bank of Dover, N. J., impleaded in said Court thereupon, and the said petition and the facts therein stipulated to be true, and the exhibits of the petitioners, and being fully advised in the premises, it is considered by the Court that the advertisement of said sale was legal and sufficient, and was both constitutional and literal in compliance with the statutory requirement. It is, therefore, on this twentieth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, ordered and directed by his Honor, Theodore Runyon, Chancellor of New Jersey, that the prayer of said petition be denied and the said petition be dismissed.

Respectfully advised.

THEODORE RUNYON, Chancellor.

A. V. VAN FLEET, Vice-Chancellor.
H. J. LITTLE, Clerk.

A Woman With New Shoes.

WHEN a woman has a new pair of shoes sent home she performs altogether different from a man. She never sits down, but she runs and yanks and hauls until she is red in the face and all out of breath and then goes dancing around, but pulls them on part way carefully, stretches them out again to take a last look and see if she has got the right one, pulls them on again, takes them off hurriedly, says they are just right, then takes another look, stops suddenly to smooth out a wrinkle, twists around and surveys them sideways, exclaims "Mercy, how loose they are," looks at them again square in front, works her foot around in them, says they are quite so much, takes them off, looks at the heel, the toe, the bottom and the inside, puts them on again, walks up and down the room and across, remarks to her self that she won't have them at any price, flits down the mirror so that she can see how they look, turns in every possible direction and nearly dislocates her neck trying to see how they look from that way, backs off, steps up again, takes thirty or forty backward looks, says they make her feet look awful big and never will do in the world, puts them off and on three or four times more, asks her husband what he thinks about it, and then pays no attention to what he says, goes through it all again, and finally says she will take them. It's a very simple matter, indeed.—Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

THERE are some scenes almost too pure and sacred to be viewed by the thoughtless world. One of them is a two-hundred-pound woman with a mole on her chin "talking baby" to an ounce-and-a-half canary bird in a brass cage.—Rockland Courier.

CONSUL, Hoarseness, Asthma, or any Irritation of the Throat or Bronchial Tubes, will be relieved by taking Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It has cured thousands. Recommend it to your friend and neighbor. Your druggist keeps it. Price, 25 cents.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

AT LAST.

Upon the earth a pilgrim wandered slowly
In search of treasures hid from mortal sight,
Yet granted unto those whose lives were lowly,
Whose faith was infinite.

He had his visions, full of life and sweetness,
That opened like a flower in his soul,
And bade him hope for grander and completer now
When he attained the goal.

He stretched his hand to pluck a dainty blossom
That might a wealth of happiness impart,
But when he pressed it closely to his bosom
The thorn pierced through his heart.

Still young and hopeful, e'en though fate was cruel,
He firmly walked across the desert sand,
Nor sparkling in his eyes at one bright jewel
That glittered in his hand.

Lo! at his touch, the gem, erewhile unfolding
A wealth of life and color, gleamed away,
In swift eclipse, and left the pilgrim holding
A worthless lot of clay.

"Since Love and Joy," he said (poor, patient mortal!)
"To me the blessed boon of death have lent,
I can but wait, and hope to reach the portal
Where Peace dwells, by and by."

He journeyed on until the day's declining
Brought him at last the pearly gates ajar;
And on his face was seen the glory shining
From a celestial sphere.

The goal is reached! The door of Heaven unfolds!
Earth's fetters loosen at each struggling breath!
And soon the pilgrim's longing vision crowns
In the embrace of Death.

From all the disappointments and denials
That were his bitter portion in the past,
From all life's cares, anxieties and trials,
He lies forever free.

Weep not that mortal has become immortal;
Grieve not that ended is the unequal strife!
Man sighs for only through night's gloomy portal
Death is the gate of Life.

JOHN, JUN.

John Basil Ximines, Greek merchant, of Mincing Lane, London, was in trouble. Not financial trouble, for the old house stood on a firm foundation; and no one knew this better than Sam Postlethwaite, confidential bookkeeper of the firm, and the trusted friend of the Greek merchant. Therefore, when he saw John Basil in so anxious a mood, he resolved to know and to share his annoyance.

"Master," he said, "you're in trouble. What is it?"

"John, Jun.," was the curt reply. "He takes no interest in the business, and if he comes to the office, grumbles and blunders till we are glad to see him leave things. You know it is so, Sam."

"John, Jun., wants an object to work for, sir. If he thought the firm was in trouble now, he would be full of energy and interest. No doubt of it, sir."

"He has lost interest in everything; hunting, yachting, shooting, travel, everything is a bore."

"Any lady in the case?"

"There is a governess at Sir Thomas Oakes' I don't like—a tall girl with red hair, and a wonderful figure and color."

"Why don't you like her?"

"She is poor; besides, John is to marry Leonora Zeiton. I bought the house with a view to that. The two united will make the finest in Middlesex. You can put them together in ring-fence."

"John, Jun., wants a deal more attention to what he says, goes through it all again, and finally says she will take them. It's a very simple matter, indeed.—Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

Sam's advice just pleased the eager lover. He was for taking it at once, and Sam did not oppose him, though John might have wondered if he had seen the face that followed his footsteps. "The lesson is pretty nearly learned," he muttered. "It takes an old bachelor like me to bring up a young man properly," and the good fellow dipped his pen in his ink with a self-satisfied chuckle.

John returned in high spirits. Leanora was an angel, she was willing to be his wife, no matter how humbly they must begin. She was coming to London next day on a visit to her aunt, and would meet him in St. Pancras Church next Saturday morning. He would have a special license by that time, and Sam could be witness.

Sam said of course he could. But Sam had no idea of doing such a thing. He put on his best suit after and went to Alexander Zeiton's office. The two men did not meet like those who have a chronic quarrel about consignments, but like old friends. They clasped hands, and went together into an inner room, from which soon came sounds of pleasant, good-fellowship. Then Sam telegraphed to John Basil Ximines, in Zante, thus: "Send for John, Jun., immediately."

After this piece of business, Sam was very busy all day, and kept John by his side. They were eating a late dinner together, when a telegram was brought to Sam, which he quietly passed over to John: "*Very important. Mr. John Ximines, Jun., wanted in Zante at once

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Goodyear, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

Memphis—Scenes in that Desolate City.

THE Memphis correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writes as follows, under date of Sept. 22:

Whether one sits in his home or wanders about the deserted streets, he sees death in every direction, from which there is no escape. The epidemic of 1873 was thought to be a visitation of unparalleled magnitude, but those who bore the brunt of that struggle speak of it as a holiday in comparison with the epidemic of 1878. There is only grief apparent everywhere to-day, for those who fled the cities less than a month ago, as also those who remain, all have lost relatives and friends prominent or else.

The hours ra of the plague have invaded the cottages of the poor and the palaces of the rich in equal proportion. The poor have not been called to bear the burden alone. Rich men neared contact with the pestilence by flight, but they left an heritage of infamy more to be dreaded than the narrow hole in the ground which contains all that was left of the victims of disease. One of the daily papers struck a popular chord the other day when it denounced as a curse to Memphis greater than the plague itself those fugitives who have not contributed one dollar in money or one word of sympathy to aid and encourage the men fighting the greatest epidemic in the history of the city. And it is true. One man, whom I hear of daily, is absent at an Eastern watering-place, and from the rents of scores of buildings on Main street contributed an insignificant sum. This, with the promise that when the Howard Fund reached a certain limited amount, he would replenish the exchequer with a further donation.

EXCLUSIVE SCENES.

Latterly the mortality has been proportionately greater among the white population than with their Caucasian brethren, and in these cases the reporters were almost debarred admittance. The epidemic when at its height was duplicated, during the past week, physician while on his rounds, had his attention attracted to the various lines of business of life within this former celebrated carnivansery, and visiting the premises, found it peopled with nearly a hundred African patients in all stages of disease. Age, sex and condition were commingled, from the mere infant in the last stages of dissolution, others manifesting the initiatory symptoms of the disease, and others beyond recovery, without medical attendance or attention, and in a fair way to resolve the established fact into a charnel house. He, of course, reported the condition of affairs at once, and in answer to the call for nurses for the sick, which, it permitted to continue, would have resulted in a resumption of the plague with all its horrors.

A gentleman of means was called to visit a family of colored sufferers residing on the outskirts of the city. The family was composed of the parents and several children, ranging in age from majority to infancy. They were the parents of negroes, with whom the physicians their disease with which all of them were known. He did what he could for these unfortunate family, who were penned up in a narrow, close, unventilated apartment, and while making his investigations, observed that one of the daughters, about twenty years of age, had been laid out for several hours. She was last being resolved into a mass of corruption, infecting a miasma insufferable, and filling the entire neighborhood with the seeds of disease. She was the only person present who was free from the prevailing complaint, and was obliged to canvass the neighborhood through a shrinking dream for help to effect a removal of the corpse. After a prolonged and almost fruitless effort, he procured the services of a neighbor, with whose assistance the body was rolled up in a sheet, taken to an outhouse and left until the storm ceased, when a rough grave was prepared and the body interred without a priestly benediction.

LACK OF BURIAL FACILITIES.

The difficulty experienced in procuring proper burial has in numerous instances left the dead unburied. Undertakers refuse to bury, and funerals are kept waiting for graves to be opened. The coffin is removed from the hearse in many instances to enable that mercenary vehicle to fill another appointment, and the services, often without a clergyman to perform the sad rites of the burial service, are obliged to wait until the last resting-place of a departed parent, son, daughter, brother, or sister is prepared. The same rule applies in regard to the services of an undertaker. His engagements are, so in advance of his ability to execute them that it is by no means unusual for a body to be kept forty-eight hours before being coffined. Last Thursday a man named McGregor, who possessed some local fame as a Scottish and necromancer, died suddenly, and notwithstanding the efforts made in that behalf, he remained unburied until yesterday, decomposition meanwhile having taken place, and creating a panic if not new cases in the vicinity of his residence. As heretofore stated, the paupers are buried in the municipal authorities, and no time, by reason of the exigencies of the case, is wasted in getting them out of sight.

Many a mournful drama from real life is enacted among the worthy poor, and if ever a history of the epidemic is written it will be fruitful with touching reminiscences of the dark days that now hang about the City on the Bluff. One case under my observation yesterday, which is a fair type of the kind, and its recital to a party of gentlemen at the dinnertable of the Peabody brought tears to the eyes of more than one, is as follows: In a very worthy widow lady, who had been surrounded by comfort, if not luxury, in better days, had her family reduced by the disease to a little daughter, whose turn came when least expected, and, realized fatality, left the poor mother alone in the world, the sole survivor of what had until recently been a happy family. Her means were exhausted, and the thought of her daughter's being buried as a pauper was too much for her maternal heart to bear. When the child was dead, the grief-stricken parent detailed the condition of her affairs to a reverend gentleman, who has been one of the foremost in his labors for the afflicted, and asked if something could be done to secure her this additional pang. She responded to the demands of her Father in Heaven, she said, in giving her last child to Him, but if she was to be laid away by strangers' hands, and fill an unknown pauper's grave, her mother's heart would be broken. The good pastor, appreciating the depth of feeling which prompted this last request, appropriated money for the child's burial, and Friday afternoon the innocent was laid away in the shade of a tree at Elmwood.

Killed by a Serpent.

A terrible calamity befel Dr. Paulhamus and his lovely and accomplished daughter Eleanor, Lancaster county, in Williamsburg, Pa. It seems that a couple of weeks ago two tramps captured a pair of enormous reptiles, which the doctor pronounced to be of that deadly species known as "blowing viper." The doctor having a desire to contribute something that would commend itself from this district, purchased the reptiles, intending to forward them to the Zoological Garden in Philadelphia. Biding their transportation, the snakes were placed in a large glass jar, the top being carefully secured by a covering of wire gauze. The jar was then placed on an elevated bracket in a remote corner of the doctor's office. Last evening the doctor and his daughter were returning from a visit to the country, and, the doctor having occasion to make up a prescription, they both entered his office, the doctor lighting a lamp. And now comes the terrible denouement. A large owl swept in through the transom above the door, and flew with the speed of an arrow against the lamp, knocking it over, and scattering the oil and broken glass in every direction. The bird seemed frantic, flying and dashing in every direction, while a general crashing of bottles and glasses was heard on every side. Meantime the doctor had lit another match, but just in time to receive his daughter. who sprang, with a wild cry, to his arms. In the darkness he gathered his darling to his arms, and in a moment realized the situation. The owl had dislodged the jar from the bracket, and the vipers were at large. Speedily the ground gave way, calling loudly for help, which, the hour being late, was slow to put in ar appearance. They seemed slow, but scarcely five minutes elapsed until full a dozen ladies and brave men were on the spot. No living head can indite the horrors of the next few minutes. Miss Eleanor, who had been insensible since she sprang to her father's arms, was now being carried for by the ladies, when one simultaneous shriek almost froze the blood and paralyzed each nerve—yet not all! It was Thomas Latz's hand that seized the glittering reptile by the neck and choked its fearful fangs apart. It had bitten the lady halfway between the ankle and the knee. She was now carried immediately to her home, where every known antidote for poison was administered by her frantic father, but all to no avail. She died at 6:30 o'clock this morning. After taking the poor unfortunate young lady home, one of the men, knowing there had been two snakes, returned to the office and soon dispatched the other. An examination showed its two large fangs missing. This led to the conjecture that possibly the doctor had been bitten. A hasty return and close examination resulted in finding the fangs in the thick leathers of the doctor's boots, who, being so alarmed for his daughter, had not the slightest knowledge of being struck. The corpse of the young lady has swollen to enormous dimensions, while her complexion is in harmony with the spots and general coloring of the snake. The larger of the snakes had had taken place. The old lady heard him with dismay. She went home, made her will, arranged her business, gave directions for the burial of the two that bit the young lady.—Altoona (Pa.) Tribune.

Safety of Railroad Traveling.

Some time ago we referred to the reports of the Railroad Commissioners of Massachusetts, on the marvelous immunity from accident railway passengers had enjoyed in that State for the twenty years or more covered by the reports.

A similar fact showing the safety of railway travel is brought out in the report made to the Connecticut Legislature by the Railroad Commissioners of that State. There were carried in 1877 in that State 4,251,015 passengers, who traveled an average distance each of fifty miles, or 212,600,000 who traveled one mile. Out of the immense number there was but one killed. That one was found near a bridge, and is supposed to have walked off from the train. So even for this one death the railroad company was not directly responsible.

Contrast this immunity with what might have been reasonably expected to happen in the old days of stagecoaches. The Hartford Courant, which appears to have given a great deal of time and study to the investigation, says it would have required 125,000 coaches, 6,000,000 horses and 425,000 drivers to convey these passengers, and at an average rate of eight miles an hour it would have taken thirteen days for the coaches to pass a given point. Who that remembers anything about the dangers of travel in the old times can believe that but a single accident would have happened?

Old sailors in a fierce storm thank the Lord they are in a staunch vessel instead of on the land. But, as compared with a vessel, a railroad train is the ark of safety. Even in the wonderfully fast train that runs between Philadelphia and New York, whose speed is at times at the rate of seventy-two miles an hour, has run now for more than two months with entire freedom from accident. The casualties that occur on any road are very few in number, and the number of persons killed or injured in comparison with those who travel is very small. If all who travel should take out a policy in an accident insurance company, the stock of that company would soon be worth a very high premium.—Cincinnati Times.

—On Tuesday Mr. James L. Dubois, who has built nearly half of Marlborough Village, N. Y., paid a visit to his brother Isaac on the Lattintown road. Returning home toward nightfall, he came by the way of Graves' dye-works, and as he was passing the upper pond a large spotted snake sprang up from behind a clump of bushes and bit him under the right eye. Mr. Dubois grasped the reptile by the neck and hurled it from him, but as he grasped it the snake fastened its fangs in Mr. Dubois under the ear. On his reaching home remedies were applied, and by midnight the swelling on his face and neck had been reduced. Yesterday he was still suffering severely, but no fatal results are anticipated.—Kingston (N. Y.) Courier.

Use Simple Words.

A certain class of people, generally not distinguished for their knowledge, either natural or acquired, have a habit of applying the loftiest sounding names they can think of to every-day objects.

Many good honest people are puzzled when they hear their agricultural neighbor speak of "bovines" and "equines," and when they read in their farm paper about "porcine profits," they never dream how much hog is involved in the profits aforesaid.

The other day a high-toned farmer friend of ours was conversing with another friend, also in the soil-tilling business, and, in the course of conversation, he spoke of his "apiary." Friend No. 2 listened attentively, but asked no questions. After the departure of No. 1, No. 2 said to us, cautiously:

"Do you suppose that's what ails his finger? He had it wrapped up. I wouldn't ask him, but I thought maybe it was a new-fangled word for a whitlow."

To-day in one of our daily newspapers, we have read advertisements, to the number of half a dozen, headed respectively:

"Salesman wanted."

"Saleslady wanted."

Now, why on earth should this distinction be made? Why not advertise for a saleswoman? or else treat the men equally as well, and give them as high-sounding a title, and advertise in this way:

"Salesgentleman wanted."

We notice this disposition at inequality of titles among pedestrians and clergyman. It prevails to a great extent. Public speakers almost invariably appeal to the young men and the young ladies. They call upon the men and the ladies to join them in their work.

Is lady a better and nobler word than woman?

Is it a higher compliment to call a singer an artiste than it is to call her a singer? Is the word seamstress any more expressive than the good old-fashioned Bible word, preacher?

Quinces are commonplace prune to mystify their patients with large words. An old lady went to a noted physician to see what could be done for a very troublesome lumbon on her foot.

The medical man examined it, prescribed for it, and remarked that "inflammation of the synovial bag" had taken place. The old lady heard him with dismay. She went home, made her will, arranged her business, gave directions for the burial of the two that bit the young lady.—Altoona (Pa.) Tribune.

On Friday the torch was applied to the premises. When the fire began to spread, a terrible sight met the eyes of those present. It was a sight that caused the beholders to flee as trees for safety. Hissing rattlesnakes and squealing rats poured out of the building from all directions. As the hot flames sprang toward the roof the crackling of the dry boards mingled with the rattle of scores of maddened serpents and unearthly yelled rodents. The very roof seemed to be alive with venomous reptiles, and the bright green and white of their cuticle covering shone with a glare as the flames lit upon them. One of the men, who was a close eye-witness of the scene, says: "One large snake, about seven feet long, opened its mouth, and out came at least two score of little reptiles, whose little tails shook in the air as if they, too, were frenzied at the destruction the flames made of their home. Several snakes charged madly upon the flames only to fall back burned to death; while the rats that could get away took to the woods. In one place a projecting log was made the object for attack by three large reptiles. As the trio charged madly upon it, a great sheet of fire, whose forked tongues were extinguished only when those of the snakes, rolled around and seized the reptiles, causing them to cease rattling, as each one dropped over dead. About the ground lay many dead serpents and roasted rats, while some were writhing and squealing in the fearful agony."—Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer.

Walking for Opportunities.

It is one of the commonest mistakes of life and also one of the most radical sources of evil, to wait for opportunities. Many persons, while admitting the paucity of their lives, and regretting that they contribute so little to the general stock of happiness, or to their own improvement, attribute it to their lack of opportunity. They are looking for some magical event, or some grand opening, through which they hope to develop what may be in them, and thus make potent a character which now, from lack of motive, is barren and unfruitful.

The waste of life caused by such misfortune is unthinkable. Probably the real materials out of which our characters are forming are the hourly occurrences of every-day life. Every claim of duty, every temptation of the minute, the daily vexations or troubles we are called upon to endure, the motions for the cultivation of kindness in the casual interview, the contact with sin or sorrow in ordinary dress—all these, and many others as small and as insignificant, are the opportunities of life. These we are continually embracing or neglecting, and out of them we are forming a character that is fast consolidating into the shape we gave it, for good or for evil. Those who are waiting for important events or great issues and memorable crises, overlook this great fact and drift aimlessly along the current that seems to them to require no effort to propel it, and which is bearing down with fearful and fatal swiftness all those who do not energetically breast its waves and resist its powers.

The best proofs of a noble character lie not so much in the manner of doing great things as in acting great kindness in the way of receiving the common events of every-day life; of discharging its varied duties, bearing its crosses and resisting its temptations. There are not a few who look upon the great occasions of life with a feeling akin to longing—who fancy that they could suffer martyrdom with resoluteness, or severe affliction with the calmness and resignation of a saint; while many yet render themselves and others wretched by their discontent and chafing over trifles, or selfishly refuse to sacrifice immaterial interests, while longing in imagination for opportunities to sacrifice all. The truest heroism is that which is unseen, unknown and the greatest victor is he who makes a silent conquest of himself.

Public mistrust, of every class, has a certain odor and popularity connected with it, that will often bear men up to endure with courage and fortitude its trials; but those who suffer alone, without sympathy, for truth or principle; those who, unnoticed by men, maintain their post, and in obscurity, and amid discouragement, patiently fulfill their trust; these are the unconscious heroes of the age, and the suffering they nobly bear is the truest martyrdom.

In the lives of all there are doubtless great crises, grand opportunities, marked epochs. But to who waits for them; will be ill-prepared to meet them and grasp them when they come. The strength to pass through them nobly and worthily must be gathered and trained little by little, in the patient and resolute struggle of every-day life. He who fails here, will surely fail in greater things. If we neg ect our minor opportunities we shall lack the power to embrace the more important ones. Chances are lying open to us every moment of our lives. We need not wait for them; they are waiting for us to profit by them. If we will watch through a single day, we shall doubtless discover scores of opportunities of both doing and receiving good, which we have perhaps hitherto passed by in indifference; and by diligent assiduity in seeking for and embracing these, we shall be prepared to encounter the fiercer storms of life that may await us, or to take advantage of the future that may open for our good.—Chicago Commercial Advertiser.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A woman of Brookfield, Mass., aged eighty, the other day, descended the well on her place, and cleaned out the debris.

—A son of Mr. Richard Henry Dana, second, has just finished a trip on a velocipede from Boston to Brattleboro, Vt., a distance of almost one hundred miles.

—A negro child at Montgomery, Ala., having been bitten by a dog, his mother proceeded at once to fill the wounds with the hair of the animal. It took the surgeon some time to clean them so as to apply the proper remedies.

—An old lady of eighty-one has been discovered in South Worcester, N. Y., who, although in good health and the full possession of all her faculties, never saw a railroad car or a steamboat, and never entered a store but once.

—Mrs. Lewis Carlaugh, of Union Township, Adams County, Pa., had her right hand scorched to the elbow by powders exploding while trying to prevent the spread of mortification caused by the sting of a catfish, which she was in the act of cleaning. For a week no more her life was in imminent peril.

—At Pittsfield, Mass., a railroad man, having paid his fine and costs for drunkenness, pleaded with the court to have his name kept out of the papers, and that so earnestly that when the Justice called the case next day he had forgotten the name he had given, and was compelled to ask the clerk who he was.

—At San Angel, Mex., last month, six ladies and three gentlemen assembled to open a box said to contain Longfellow's poem "Excelsior." They took off one cover and found another inside; this they removed and it disclosed a zinc plate; they started to rip that off, and then there came a box of thinderscound and only one person was left alive in the room. The box had contained nitro-glycerine.

—An exception has been discovered to the rule laid down by Josh Billings and other philosophers that "all good things die young." The Amelia (Va.) Reveille says: During the night of the day on which the flood occurred there were many drunken men on Main street. One of those, in drunken recklessness, took a handful of coin from his pocket and threw it on the ground. An Indian standing by gathered up the pieces and offered them to him, but the white man refused the money, and said: "You keep it, Jim, and treat the Indians with it." "All right," replied the Indian, "me keep 'im; give 'im you back when you sober." The Indian did keep the money and gave him back his money.

—A most extraordinary instance of pluck and endurance, combined with a tremendous appetite, is that of a man death by suffocation or starvation, recently transpired at Grizzly Flat, near Lewis Hill, in Placer County, Cal. An old man, known as "Grizzly" Brown, while at work in his mine, was overwhelmed and buried by a fall in one of the mine. He was lightly shut in seventy-five yards from daylight, with scarcely a hope that he would be missed and search made for him for quite a while a distance from any human habitation, with not a mouthful of food and only half a bottle of whisky for drink, and no person or thing from which to look for assistance save his pick and shovel, which, fortunately as it proved for him, was buried with him. He began the almost hopeless task of digging himself out. Fortunately, the earth proved soft and easy to work in, and, finally, after having been entombed for three days, with nothing to sustain life but the friendly bottle of whisky, he opened the surface nearly exhausted from his long fast, but with strength enough remaining to reach a place where he could get food and nourishment.—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

Public mistrust, of every class, has a certain odor and popularity connected with it, that will often bear men up to endure with courage and fortitude its trials; but those who suffer alone, without sympathy, for truth or principle; those who, unnoticed by men, maintain their post, and in obscurity, and amid discouragement, patiently fulfill their trust; these are the unconscious heroes of the age, and the suffering they nobly bear is the truest martyrdom.

AGRICULTURAL BREVITIES.

—Mr. Clarkson, the venerable editor of the Agricultural Department of the Iowa State Register, furnishes that paper the following hits of agricultural wisdom:

If a farmer has a little farm, well tilled and well stocked, and is out of debt, no matter how it may storm financially, or rain literally, he can like Noah, sail on serenely.

Green corn and new oats are good for pigs, provided they are fed with judgment. At first, use but little corn and plenty of judgment; afterward, use more corn and less judgment.

We make this bold declaration: The crops on our farms could be doubled, and double the money could be made from our stock, if a wiser system of breeding, feeding and caring for stock were adopted.

Farming is a science and an art which has to be learned. A large majority of the farmers in the United States have had an agricultural teachers but their fathers, who taught them many errors. And they generally stick to the errors of their fathers with great stubbornness.

After your crop has been raised, it will be wisdom to raise any mortgage which may be resting upon the farm. This value is simply bond from your mind and raise your courage and spirits beyond measure. Do not carry this load one hour longer. If you must do something of the kind, just carry your cattle and horses. This will do them good, and benefit you also.

Prof. Budd gives this advice as to currants: "For the benefit of those who wish to extend their currant plantations, we will add that early fall is the proper time to put out currant cuttings. A soon as leaves begin to drop, cut the canes into sections about six inches in length and stick them in where wanted, at an angle of 45 deg., with the top bud about even with the ground surface. They will form roots before cold weather sets in and make strong plants the next season. Cuttings of the gooseberry will succeed famously treated in the same manner."

Grasses should be mixed for pastures. In this respect truly, "variety is the spice of life." Many men sow a few quarts of blue grass, or clover, or timothy, and think they have prepared a pasture. This is a considerable variety and plenty of seeds should be sown if we would imitate Naturo or supply the natural appetites of domestic animals. It is not good for man to live on bread alone, nor cows on timothy alone. Beside some grasses are rich and juicy some strengthening and some in others. But the cow, horse, sheep or hog, not only need but desire variety in food. The main reason why old pastures are superior to new ones is the great variety of grasses which have naturally accumulated in the process of years.

Increasing Fertility.

A well-known English agricultural writer, more than a decade ago, wrote that the fertility of the soil can be increased by the operation of new processes, and of new implements, by the importation and manufacture of new manures, by the cultivation of new plants and by the maintenance of a large stock of improved animals. It is the keystone to successful agriculture everywhere. The farmer who buys the best implements for working the soil, always having in view simplicity of construction and consequent economy in cost; who increases the fertility of his soil by green fallows; who makes grass the basis for a rotation; who breeds his animals up and gives them the sustaining power toward improvement by liberal feeding from birth upward; who conducts his operations from a business standpoint—this one is the successful husbandman. Work does not drive him, he drives his work. It is nonsense to talk about a soil growing poor in the course of five or ten years' cropping unless the individual has shamefully mismanaged it. In fact, so far as the virgin soils of the West and South are concerned, deterioration is the result of mismanagement, or of cropping to special crops year after year, than to anything else. The man who plows and sows when wet or alters its mechanical structure that sometimes it will take years to bring it back to its normal state. Often in fact, it can never be done. Sandy lands do not bake or run together, and from this and no other reason is it that these are also happily adapted to permeation. Yet these soils are far less rich than the more tenacious clays or strong loams. These latter if plowed when in a friable condition, will remain intact, or nearly so mechanically. It is simply nonsense to talk about the degeneration of the soil. The earth is a great reservoir of fertility. Culture, the garden of the earth, has been cultivated for thousands of years. The cereal yield of England, through improved cultivation, has been advanced within the last forty years two hundred per cent. In the United States improved systems of cultivation, careful rotation and the application of manure, a great advance has been made in the average yield of crops. The same may be said of the South within the last five years. Also in the West, many farmers may be found who have kept the fertility of their farms intact from decade to decade. Yet, as a rule, the lands of the West are constantly decreasing in their average yield. This is natural enough to all new countries. The processes are crude and the money crops few. It is, however, a wise policy, as soon as possible, to so diversify the crops that a proper rotation may be secured. This, with plenty of grass and live stock to eat it, will not only keep up the fertility of the soil, but make it better and better year by year, rather than worse.—Prairie Farmer.

Sagacity of the Deer.

A Nimrod, who has been in the habit of hunting deers in the Adirondack Mountains, is of the opinion that the deer is often more than a match for a dog, in sagacity. The deer seems to be well aware that the dog is guided by the faculty of scent, in tracking him; and all the deer's efforts are directed to baffling and thwarting this keen and wonderful sense with which the dog is gifted. With this purpose, the deer will often make enormous leaps, or run around in a circle so as to confuse and puzzle his pursuer. He will mount a stone wall, aware that the dog cannot scent him so well on the rock as on the grass. If he can find a pond or stream of water, the deer will plunge in and swim a long distance, so that the dog may lose his trail. It is a joyful sound to the poor hunted deer when the dog send up that sad, dismal howl which they send up when they have all scent of the deer and despair of finding it. He is then a happy deer. He hides quietly in some covert among the bushes, and he takes care to place himself where the wind will carry all odors of his body away from the direction where he supposes the dog to be.

PASTVILLE, Ala., July 22d, 1878

BENSON MEDICINE CO., Atlanta, Ga.

Gentlemen—About three months ago I commenced using your "Anti-Fat," at which time my weight was 229 pounds. By following you discretions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 168 pounds. This is a very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to my commencing the use of your medicine, I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my sorrow, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of my coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee-sack on a bean-pole, and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your other business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind, and let me know what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business. Yours truly, GEORGE BOYD.

THE October returns to the Department of Agriculture indicate the average condition of the cotton crop to be 90. Compared with October, 1877, the growing crop shows an improvement of 11 per cent. With the increased acreage planted the present crop promised to produce more than 5,000,000 bales.

DURING the celebration of a wedding in a colored church, at Lynchburg, Va., on the evening of the 16th, the building being densely crowded, an alarm was given that the structure was falling. A terrible panic ensued, and the unreasoning crowd made a wild rush for the doors and windows. The bride, groom and eight of their immediate attendants were crushed and trampled to death, and from fifty to sixty women and children more or less seriously injured.

THE New York Mine books, recently seized at Marquette while they were being used as evidence in the case of the United States against Samuel J. Tilden, were returned to the office from which they were taken, on the 16th, in obedience to an order of the United States District Court.

CONSIDERABLE anxiety existed at Lincoln, Neb., on the 17th, concerning the safety of two surveying parties of forty men, who were surveying Government lands on the Niobrara River, in the immediate track of the Cheyennes on their recent raid. No word had been received from them for nearly two weeks. A detachment of cavalry from Camp Robbison had been ordered to search after them.

THE returns for October to the Department of Agriculture place the average condition of the corn crop at 96 per cent., an increase of 4 per cent. over the September average. The total yield will not vary largely from 1,300,000,000. The yield of wheat will exceed that of last year, a total of over 400,000,000 being indicated. The rate of yield will probably be somewhat larger than the fine crop of 1877.

IT was feared, at Washington, on the 20th, that the Arctic vessel Florence had been lost off the Atlantic Coast, with all on board, during recent gales. The vessel sailed from New London, Conn., eighteen months ago, for the Arctic Regions, under the direction of Capt. Howgate, and was to have been followed by another vessel, with additional supplies and men, but the appropriations asked for not being granted she returned and was at New foundland on the 20th ult., and should have reached New London in ten days thereafter. She had a crew of three officers and ten seamen.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

THE only surviving son of Jefferson Davis, Sr., was among the victims of the fever, on the 16th. He was twenty-one years of age. There were eight deaths within and fifteen outside the city limits of Memphis. The deaths in New Orleans numbered twenty-six; Cairo, two, and three new cases; Chattanooga, four, and fourteen new cases. There was no material abatement in the disease in the smaller towns. The situation at Brownsville, Tenn., was very discouraging. There had been over 500 cases and 150 deaths to date, and 130 cases were then under treatment. The deaths within the preceding forty-eight hours numbered ten.

A VICKSBURG telegram of the 17th gives news of the death of Lieut. Benner, of the relief boat Chambers. He died on the morning of the 17th. The announcement of his death cast a pall of sadness over the entire city, and caused a deep feeling of sorrow at Washington and elsewhere throughout the country. He voluntarily accompanied the steamer on its mission of mercy into the infested district, and had expressed the belief that, by his long service in the South during the war, he had become acclimated. He caught the disease by having given up his stateroom to a lady from the infected district, who was at the time nearly suffering from the disease, though she may have been unaware of the fact. Lieut. Benner served throughout the war in the Eighteenth Illinois Volunteers. In 1867 he was appointed Second Lieutenant of the Eighteenth Infantry (regulars), and was promoted to First Lieutenant in 1875. It was reported from Washington, on the 17th, that Gov. Shepherd had, with the approval of the Secretary of War, telegraphed to Lieut. Hall to return with the steamer to St. Louis and there put it in quarantine.

FROST made its appearance in many sections of the South on the night of the 15th and 16th, and ice formed in some localities. There were seven deaths in Memphis, on the 19th, and four on the 20th, six of whom were whites and five colored; six deaths were reported outside the city limits, on the 20th. During the twenty-four hours ending at noon, on the 20th, there were forty-four cases and twenty-seven deaths in New Orleans. It was thought, on the 20th, in localities where frost had appeared, that a change for the better would take place in a few days, by a diminution in the number of new cases.

A TELEGRAM from New York, on the 20th, gives the number of deaths of ministers in the South, by yellow fever, down to that date at fifty-six. Of these twenty-four were Catholics, thirty-one Protestants and one Jewish Rabbi.

IT was reported, on the 20th, that Minister Noyes, at Paris, had forwarded $3,000, and the Emperor William, of Germany, had contributed 3,000 reichmarks (about $700), for the relief of the yellow-fever sufferers in this country.

WARM weather again prevailed at the South, on the 21st, and fears were entertained that returning refugees in the cities would add new victims to the scourge. There were eighteen deaths in the city and suburbs of Memphis, and twenty-three new cases. At New Orleans the new cases numbered thirty-one; deaths, fifty-four; total cases to date, 12,312; deaths, 3,733. There were two deaths at Cairo, but no new cases. Two more deaths had occurred at Gallipolis, Ohio, and there were six cases convalescent. The Memphis & Charleston Railroad resumed operations on the 21st. Notification was made at Memphis that no more rations to able-bodied citizens would be issued after the 25th. The fever was still prevailing with fatal effect in most of the interior infected towns.

SAMUEL J. TILDEN published a card in the New York newspapers, on the 17th, in which he denied emphatically that he either sent, received or authorized any of the cipher telegrams, lately published, and relating to the Presidential count in the disputed States. He says: "I never sent any of those dispatches, and never authorized anyone to send them, or any of them, for me. I never knew, and do not know, the meaning of the cipher or any of the ciphers, in which they, or any of them are written and could not read them if I would. During a short period immediately after the late Presidential election a large number of telegrams were sent to my address for other persons, and called for by messengers. The practice was commenced without my consent, and after a few days discontinued by my requirement, because their frequency rendered them a great annoyance. I never knew the contents of those telegrams."

The meeting was, it is said, originally composed of about 2,000 men, women and children—mostly colored.

Their miserable abode was literally drenched with the old woman's blood, flowing from numerous wounds in her body. The only other tenant of the house was his four-year-old daughter, and she clearly and intelligently related that her father and grandmother quarreled, her father finally throwing down the old woman and kicking her in the head, and afterward stamping his foot on her neck, the little one illustrating the action by herself bringing down her own tiny heel.

Mr. Brown explained that he was a poor man and had no money, and began to let him proceed unharmed. By this time the second highwayman had left the head of the horse and joined his companion, and both were badgering Mr. Brown, telling him that it was useless to affect great physical weakness and poverty, for he had "shell out." Meanwhile the girl had gained possession of the whip and at that point she suddenly seized the reins and, with the heavy butt-end of the whip, knocked one of the robbers down, while she dealt the other a severe blow. INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A few nights ago, at Wilkesbarre, Pa., as four of the miners were endeavoring to dispense an accumulation of gas in the shaft of a coal mine, one of them brought out a naked lamp. An explosion instantly followed, resulting in the death of the entire party.

—At Franklin, Tenn., the other day, John Prewitt shot his own son with a shot-gun, while engaged in a family quarrel. The son begged his father not to murder him, but he mercilessly shot out his eyes and then went running through the woods swearing to kill his two other sons who were in the altercation.

—At Woodbridge Center, Conn., the other day, Mrs. Kane's dress caught fire from the kitchen-stove. Losing her presence of mind, she rushed to the barn and attempted to extinguish the flames by rolling over like a log. Of course the barn was set on fire and the poor, crazed creature, horribly burned, got up, ran and jumped into the water and drowned.

—There is a tinge of romance about the marriages of the Hon. Orsan Brooks, of Denver, Col., to Mrs. Nancy Mitchell, of Los Angeles, Cal., which took place recently. The groom is seventy years of age and the bride fifty-three. Forty-five years ago the Judge was the accepted suitor of the lady he has now wed. The relentless purpose of fate separated them for years, and the lady and gentleman have both since married twice and lost, ie his wives by death, she her husband, something like a year ago their paths crossed again, and the Judge has now married his first choice.—Chicago Tribune.

—Recently a young married couple in New Orleans determined to visit the "old folks," who live in one of the coast parishes, and surprise them by displaying a new grandchild. Accordingly they started for the ancestral home, but when the young man and his fair wife neared the paternal mansion and their advent was announced, the old man, afraid of the yellow-fever, peremptorily refused to see his son or daughter or his child, and furthermore ordered them off his premises; and, despite all remonstrances, they were obliged to depart, greatly chagrined.

—At South Canaan, Conn., a few days since, William Blodgett, an insurance person, procured a shovel, and proceeded to the cemetery a short distance to the south of the village with the design of "resurrecting" his brother Milan, who was buried there five years ago. He dug up the body and opened it, revealing the sickening sight of the horrible grinning skeleton. He then covered it up and departed, and procured a pitcher of milk, for the application of which the "resurrection" was to be accomplished, and remained all night, bathing the skull and other bones with the fluid. He was found in the morning still occupied and talking incoherently to his ghastly patient.

—In Baldwin Co., Ga., recently, a party of colored boys met together and held a mock court, all duly organized, with judge, jury, lawyer, witnesses, etc. One of their number was tried for some offense, witnesses examined, speeches from their lawyers, charge of the jury delivered, and a verdict rendered by the jury of guilty. The sentence of death was pronounced by the judge, a rope was immediately placed around the neck of the criminal and thrown over some place to secure the other end, and jumped into the water and drowned.

—Maj. Gladwin soon heard of her and her unusual skill, and sent for her to come into the fort as he had an ulcerated tooth to make up into moccasins.

When she came he found her rightly named Mee-mi, which signifies wild-pigeon, as she was peculiarly delicate and timid for a squaw.

Making known to her, by the interpreter, his want of moccasins, he gave her the elk skin from which, in a few days, she produced a quaint and beautiful pair. So delighted was he with her work that he kept her fingers busy all the spring in one device and another, meantime showing her such courtesies, making her so many presents, and paying her such liberal prices as to quite win her confidence. To genuine Mee-mi there was nobody like the fair officer, so brave and refined, and yet so smiling and generous. He was so different from her father and other warriors, who, with their courage and kingly stature, combined rude manners and often rough words. As events proved, the innocent girl's gratitude and regard for him prompted her to a noble deed in his behalf.

In the summer, while the corn was growing in the Indians' fields and the game was increasing and fattening in the woods, a motley crowd of men, women and children from the neighboring tribes, Ottawa chiefly, gathered in the vicinity of the fort for the purpose of bartering away to the soldiers the trifles which they had manufactured in their wigwams during the winter and spring. They were attended by the celebrated Pontiac, a great Chieftain, sometimes styled an Emperor, and all their manners and associations seemed friendly in the utmost degree. Some days of pleasant trading passed, and at length their relations were so agreeable that Pontiac proposed to the Commandant of the fort a council for the purpose of "brightening the chain of peace."

Maj. Gladwin readily assented without a suspicion of harm, and it was arranged that the council should be smoked the next morning inside the fort. To show his peaceful intentions and confidence in the whites, Pontiac stipulated to bring with him 200 unarmed warriors, thus making a most imposing display.

During the day the fort was put in order for the council in the morning. In the afternoon timid Mee-mi made her appearance with some imminently fine needle-work for the Major; but she was strangely reserved considering how familiar she had become of late.

After a long and vain attempt to learn the cause of her changed manners, he dismissed her with a fine elk-skin which he wished her to manufacture into spectacles and purses for certain of his friends.

As the gates were being shut at night, the officer of the guard found Mee-mi still inside the walls and weeping as if in great sorrow. At being ordered out her distress was sharply increased, and she refused to go. Thereupon the officer led her away to the Commandant's quarters and requested the favor to him. Now the girl showed still greater emotion, but gave as her reason for remaining within the fort that she did not like to carry away the skins which she had so set so high a value upon it. But this answer was so poor and unsatisfactory that it only made him suspicious of something of serious importance.

He therefore urged her to tell what was in her mind.

Finally she replied with sobs that if she told what she knew Pontiac would kill her.

At this the Commandant redoubled his efforts to incline her to confide her trouble to him, promising to stand between her and all harm, even from Pontiac.

It is no wonder, however, that a timid girl should hesitate to do anything to incur the vengeance of so mighty a Chief as Pontiac.

At length Maj. Gladwin prevailed, and she stated that a plot was formed to murder him and the other officers at the council, in the morning, and then slaughter the garrison and take possession of the fort. "Even now," said she, in her rolling Indian language, "they are cutting off their gun barrels so long they can hide them beneath their blankets. And, see, the great Chief draws the peace belt of wampum during his speech, the warriors will take the scalps of my good officer and all his men. . . . And then the poor girl's grief burst forth anew, and, sitting down on the floor of the quarters, she began to swing back and forth and utter that doleful note always expressive of a squaw's great sorrow—"Wahonowin! Wahono wina!" When she became calm again, and the interpreter was enabled to learn the whole plot, it appeared that the savages were actually intending to come to the council fully armed, every weapon concealed under their blankets; and, at a concerted signal from Pontiac, they would begin a massacre which would only stop when the last of the garrison was dead. A thousand warriors were to wait outside the gates ready to enter when those within should open to them at the beginning of the fray.

Such a Judas was Pontiac, and how worse than a demon's kiss was to be that signal of the peace belt which would begin the carnage!

But "forewarned is forearmed," and Maj. Gladwin proved equal to the occasion.

The night was spent in stern preparation for the morning's event. The soldiers were informed of the plot, and every man enjoined to put his musket in perfect order, load it carefully and pick the flint, and fill his cartridge-box with ammunition. Several cannon were posted so as to command the Council House, and when supplied with ammunition were covered with sailcloth to hide them from view. Certain weak places in the stockade were quickly repaired.

And, in short, everything possible was done in order to give a fitting reception to Pontiac and his bloodthirsty band.

Promptly at ten o'clock the Indians appeared at the gate ready for their treacherous work. The stipulated 200 warriors were counted off and marched in, apparently unarmed, although it must be confessed that for a warm July morning their extreme care in holding their heavy blankets snugly about them seemed rather ridiculous.

When they had all entered, the gates were not only snugly closed, but certain ingenious fastenings applied which no Indian could readily loosen or break.

Thus it appeared as if whatever slaughter of the troops they might undertake the 200 must have to cut, unaided by the savages the other side of the walls.

Within, Pontine noticed the garrison under arms and posted in battle order around the Council House, and upon asking the reason was told that it was designed as a mark of honor to him and the distinguished Chiefs attending him. Whether the wily old sachem mistrusted the real cause his stolical face gave no token.

The Council House was simply a large room supported on posts, without side-walls, so that when the Indians had stationed themselves according to their ideas of rank they were in plain view of the proceedings and preparations that Maj. Gladwin had effected.

After a few of the highest Chiefs and some of the officers had puffed the pipe of peace, Pontiac began his speech in the course of which the grand catastrophe was to occur.

To say that every white man in the fort was suppressing a furnace of excitement would not convey the intensity of the hour.

Around the speaker's waist was the wampum belt designed to introduce the carnage, while under many a warrior's blanket the ill-concealed shapes and corners of weapons were discernible.

But Pontiac and his band could not have felt at ease in the circumstances. The cannon, having been uncovered and the gunners stood by with burning fuses; every soldier was in position to discharge his musket at a second's warning; while the savages, encumbered with blankets and crowded together, were placed at a serious disadvantage.

The speech proceeded, and at the point where the wampum was to be passed to Maj. Gladwin as the signal for the fight, each officer drew his sword, each soldier raised his gun to his shoulder to fire, and each gunner at the cannon stepped forward for his fearful duty.

But these movements showed the Indians that they were detected.

Pontiac stammered and trembled, every Chief flinched and many exclaimed, and for once these stoics of the forest were unnerved.

Pontiac stammered and trembled, every Chief flinched and many exclaimed, and for once these stoics of the forest were unnerved.

But here Pontiac's consummate subtlety came to his help. He neatly avoided the concerted sign, and, closing his speech with words of the warmest regard for the whites, gave way for Maj. Gladwin's reply.

And now the polite and kind-souled Commandant showed himself master of the situation.

He directly and loudly charged Pontiac with his treachery and taunted him with the crime and failure of the diabolical plot.

And when the old Chief denied, and pretended there was no plot, and that his warriors were actually unarmed, as he had promised, Gladwin drew his sword, and, gallantly marching down the line of savages, pulled aside many of their blankets and revealed the shortened guns, tomahawks and scalping-knives.

At this the red-skins' confusion knew no bounds. But words are inadequate to describe the scene; the reader must picture it for himself.

Just here appears the superiority in noble and humane qualities of civilized man over the barbarian, for instead of taking away their arms and imprisoning the whole band, or ripping the weak guns upon them, Maj. Gladwin mercifully ordered them from the fort, though it must be acknowledged that he did it with a vehemence of words and vigor of action that could not have been very flattering to the pride of a pompous Indian Emperor like Pontiac.—*Irving L. "Ah!" said the precocious baby, looking up with a twinkling eye, "you don't think 'atin' carrots like for the stomach, do you?" And his little sister of four exclaimed, with emotion, "There, Hanky! "Why, I put my finger down so," answered he, placing the other forefinger, as he thought, well away from the teeth. To his horror, the saw took that one, too, clean off at the second joint.

All the World Represented at Paris.

You may gain an idea of the crowds in attendance on the Exhibition when I send you the report of strangers arriving during the past week. In all there were 18,000. England sent 4,000; Belgium, 3,000. You will be surprised to hear, considering the relations between the two countries, that there are 1,000 Germans. Italy, this being the holiday season for the Italians, sent 1,512. The United States were fifth on the list, sending 278—more than Spain, which contributed 1,057, or Switzerland, with her 1,037, or Austria, who sent 733, or Holland, of which Nation there were 646. Russia contributes largely to the cosmopolitan world of Paris, but the war has made Russia poor, and she sends only 342. As an illustration of the minuteness with which such things are noted in this much-governed country, I will give you the remainder of the list:—Luxemburg, 242; Poland, 224; Sweden and Norway, 183; Denmark, 162; Portugal, 158; Roumania (now ranking as a Nation), 151; Algeria, 130; Brazil, 102; the French Colonies, 95; Greece, 81; Turkey, 63; Egypt, 52; the Indies, 51; Canada, 29; Mexico, 27; Peru, 26; Japan, 13; Venezuela, 11; China, 10; Colombia, 9; Chili, 6; Morocco, 6; Australia, 4; Paraguay, 3; Costa Rica, 2; Persia, 2; San Salvador, 2; Tunis, 2; Bolivia, 1; Ecuador, 1; Honduras, 1; Nicaragua, 1; Uruguay, 1; Wonderful and various is this cosmopolitan crowd in Paris. The bonne-varis are a dress parade of the Nationalities. Here are forty-three Nations sending tribute to Paris, for each one of this more than 18,000 is a bearer of tribute. When people ask, "Does the Exhibition pay?" the answer is found in this recapitulation. How much money does each one of these tribute bearers bring? They come for silks and wine, for bronzes and paintings, for the hundred thousand articles that Paris supplies. I wonder, for instance, how much our 1,077 Americans bring? There are lazzaros to visit, theaters to see, cafes, balls, millinery. I suppose it is safe to say that this 1,077 will leave two or three millions of francs in Paris. When you take this as the contribution of one Nation, the weekly contributionone, when you consider that all Nations are swelling the stream, you may have some idea of the money Paris will earn through the Exposition. The mere show, as it appears in a ledger account, will be a loss. France will have to pay several millions of francs out of the Treasury to meet the expenses; the other Nations will have their own expenses, for which there can be only an indirect return. But when all is over France will be richer by millions and millions in mere money because of this Exposition, and richer in what money cannot buy—a reawakened self-esteem and the respect of mankind.—Paris Cor. N. Y. Herald.

Electricity in Thunder-Clouds.

The great development of electricity in thunder-storms has been a subject of much speculation. Its explanation, however, is still an unsettled question. Some views on this subject are presented in this paper.

We have no evidence that the production of fogs or clouds—the change from invisible to visible vapor, or from combined to uncombined moisture—produces any electricity. All experiments to establish such a supposition have had a negative result.

Those particles of vapor we may suppose to be small spherules, each with its normal portion of electricity that surrounds or occupies the surface of the sphere. When two of these particles unite and form one

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Crouter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in seven cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, GEO. W. CROUTER.

How a Life Was Saved—The Reward of Perseverance.

There was a terrible accident at South Norwalk, Conn., twenty-five years ago. The draw over the railroad bridge had been by some carelessness left open, and the engineer, mistaking the signal, dashed on, and down thundered and crashed the train. The loss of life was terrible, and very many were crushed and badly wounded. Even now, after so many years, it is spoken of as one of the great horrors.

People living near by, and others who were attracted to the scene of the accident, worked nobly, and rendered all the assistance they could. Men came in boats, and tenderly lifted the dead and dying bodies from the water, carried them up on the bank, and laid them gently down to be further cared for. Among those attracted to the scene was a middle-aged man, who was a stage-driver, whose route was between New Canaan and South Norwalk. He saw them bringing up on the bank the bodies of those taken from the water, and one body particularly attracted him. It was the body of a fair young girl, and a strange feeling seemed to tell him that she was not dead. He felt of her hand. It was cold and clammy. Placing his ear over her heart he could detect no beating. Yet something within him said she was not dead. A physician, after making an examination, pronounced life extinct, and urged the driver to assist the others in caring for the wounded.

He turned to go, and again that irresistible feeling impelled him to try to save the girl's life. Securing the assistance of two woman, he began a vigorous rubbing of the body. He labored on until the water fairly poured from him. The lazy curiosity-seekers gathered around and said it was a foolish task, she was past helping. Nevertheless, on he worked. No change was observed for half an hour, and his heart began to sink. For the last time he began a desperate renewal of his exertions since, for the women had stopped, and, as he drew himself up to go away, the girl, with a low moan, opened and closed her eyes. With a rush, the blood dashed to his heart, and he almost fainted, and with open-mouthed astonishment the throngs again gathered around. After a little while she was restored to consciousness, and her life had been saved.

After she had learned the facts she went to her deliverer, and, with tears of joy, thanked him.

She was the only daughter of very wealthy parents, and deep was their gratitude. When the girl took him to her home, her mother kissed him, embraced him and cried for joy.

Her father gave him a handsome gold watch and chain and clothing; everything that wealth could bestow on him was done. He was urged to pass the remainder of his life with them; but he declined this, and went back to his own home thankful for their kindness.

This was twenty-five years ago. Regularly every year since then, he has received a present in money sufficient to keep him in luxury for the next twelve months, beside presents without end from these grateful hearts.

Brief Biography of Methuselah.

What a tremendous boyhood old Methuselah had! He died at the rather advanced age of 969 years, about 900 years more than man's span of life. At that rate, when he was 200 years old he about equaled an ordinary lad of sixteen. He was thirty or forty before his parents bought him a rattle to play with, and he didn't have the measles and other infantile diseases until he was over 100. He was in no sort of hurry about these things, as he had so far to go. We imagine that he was rather a delicate child to begin with, as most people were who live to a great age. We can imagine his mother's anxiety with regard to his delicate constitution, telling Mrs. Brown across the way, on his nineteth birthday, that she was afraid she "never would be able to raise that child." Generations of men lived and passed away while he was going around in petticoats, and he almost a centenarian before he got into his first boots. His father used to lick him when he was 150, for robbing a neighbor's watermelon patch.

Young Methuselah was probably in the vicinity of a hundred years old when he was first sent to school. We can imagine him sitting on the low bench, learning his a-b-abs, among the great-great-grandchildren of people who began life when he did. He was mischievous, of course—all boys are, no matter what their age (we experience a mild frskiness ourself occasionally), and had to be punished forit.

"William Henry Methuselah, stand up!" says the teacher, catching him in the very act of placing a bent pin in a seat where a schoolmate was about to sit down. "What do you mean by such conduct as this?"

Young Methuselah begins to sniffle and wipe his eyes with the corner of his jacket.

"One would think," continues the teacher, sternly, "that you wasn't over seventy-five or eighty years old by the way you behave. Instead of that you have already celebrated your first centennial—almost a young man, in fact. You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

Then Methuselah is condemned, as an expiation, to "sit among the girls" until recess. And if you think that isn't an agreeable form of punishment you will have to ask some one older than Methuselah.

Whenever a circus came to town, with "children half price" on its bills, young Methuselah must have experienced difficulty in making the ticket-seller understand that he was entitled to go in on a half price ticket, particularly after he got along toward his two-hundredth year. But he probably did it. Boys are enterprising and persistent where a circus is concerned. And we will bet that Methuselah, in his youthful days, could accumulate as much old iron as the next boy, and lay it by for the coming show.

When this youngster got into his teens—say from 200 to 300 years old—he probably did as other young gentlemen of tender age do, went around with the girls. It must have been a little embarrassing to him, after beaning a young lady about a spell—taking her to concerts, parties, balls, etc.—to discover that she was a great-great-great-great-granddaughter of some old friend of his father's, but these things were inevitable under the peculiar and exceptional character of the circumstances. They could hardly be otherwise. There is no record to show that any woman lived in his time to an age that would begin to compare with his. And if there had, the world would never have known it. At least, not from her. She wouldn't have acknowledged to anything over forty had she lived twice the age of Methuselah.

Employing the proportion of twenty-one to seventy to Methuselah's years, we find that he was a minor until he was 270 years old. If the laws regarding minors were enforced in his day, young Methuselah must have been run out of billiard rooms and shut out from bars for over two centuries. And what a sensation must have been created when he stepped up to deposit his first vote. Of course he voted for all the Presidents, from Washington (whom he remembers shaking hands with) down. All old men did that. And when he got to be along in years, say 900 or such a matter, he could sit and tell the boys about the hard winter of '32, and the panic of '37, and the flood of '39, and the hard cider campaign of '40, and all that sort of thing. This is all we have to write at present of Methuselah, the original "oldest inhabitant."—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

Boys Led Astray.

Two young lads of about sixteen, in same farm neighborhood of Indiana, had fired their imaginations, last spring, by reading sea-stories, until they resolved that they would no longer waste their lives in plowing and foddering stock, but would launch out on the briny deep in search of Indian wars and pirates, to rescue shipwrecked ladies, to be embraced by Admirals and promoted to Captaincies on their first voyage, after the usual course of affairs with sailors—in dime novels. They begged their way from Indiana to New York. There, on the Courtlandt street ferry-boat, they had their first glimpse of the bay, which they supposed to be the ocean.

They stared at each other in dismay. "It's an awful wash of water, Jim!" said one.

"Let's go home," said the other, after a pause.

They were arrested as vagrants, but when their story was known some charitable gentleman sent them back to their plowing. Their uncomfortable experiences had quite extinguished all desire for sea-life.

We can hardly open a daily paper without finding cases in which the utterly demoralizing boys' newspapers, sold at every news-stand, or the equally pernicious dime novels, have led boys into crime and misery.

In New York, last week, two boys of about eleven, who belonged to Christian families of high social position, were found to be out of their beds at two o'clock in the morning. A terrified search was made, and the father of one of them met the boys swaggering up the street. When he spoke to them, his son replied by firing a pistol at his head. The ball missed its aim, but the boy was arrested.

"Where were you going?" he was asked, at the station.

"Out in search of adventure," he said.

"What could induce you to shoot at your father?"

"Oh, I'm tired of the old man's tyranny! Besides, every man goes armed now, and defends himself when insulted."

This lad had been carefully guarded against other evil influences but that of this pernicious literature, which had literally maddened him.

The Superintendent of the Pennsylvania Eastern House of Refuge declares that the majority of its inmates are brought there by the influence of these publications. Openly obscene books, he says, reach very few children; but respectable parents permit their boys to buy these flash papers—even buy them for them. Next come the lodging for the variety-shows, and once admitted to those hot-beds of vulgarity and vice, the headlong descent into crime soon follows.—Youth's Companion.

Real Merit Will Win.

History furnishes no example of anything but merit winning in the end. Bubbles float gaily and lightly upon the air, and sparkle very beautifully in the sunlight, but they float but for a moment, and then burst and are forgotten. Society has its bubbles, business circles have their bubbles, the church has its bubbles, life is full of bubbles, but their fate is the fate of the bubble in the air. Occasionally a Fisk bursts upon the community, dazzles for a day, and then dies and is forgotten—leaving the record of a life that no sensible man or boy would wish to imitate. There is no real merit in such a life—nothing that the world wishes to die to or remember.

The only life that is a success is the one made up of actions which are the fruit of pure motives and the highest sense of duty to ourselves, our fellows and our Creator. Such motives and such deeds make character that will stand all the storms of temptation and evil that may ever beat upon life's pathway, and will win the approbation of every soul whose good opinion is worth anything. There is no meteoric glitter about such a life—it is the constant, modest twinkling of the star. It develops as the grain in the field develops, and not as the mushroom grows. It quietly bears its magnificent harvest of good, and is often so modest as scarcely to be noticed, until it has been clouded in death. The very best lives that have ever left their impress upon the world have been so modest that they were scarcely noticed until they had set, and then the brilliant effect was as glorious and attractive as a picture painted by a setting sun. The work of life is to do good, and no good was ever done that was lost; it is always as lasting as eternity. If men would be successful they must be something, and not appear to be something.

Sensible men feel as a friend of ours expressed himself a few days since. He is the father of a beautiful and accomplished daughter, who was betrothed to a young man of character and some supposed wealth. Before the wedding-day arrived, however, the young man, without fault of his, was overtaken by misfortune, and was forced into bankruptcy and left without means. He went immediately to the father of the young lady, explained the situation to him and offered to release the young lady from her engagement. "So far I am concerned," said the father, "you can go right along. I did not give you my daughter because I thought you had money," and some time after he gave the reason why he no longer waste their lives in plowing and foddering stock, but would launch out on the briny deep in search of Indian wars and pirates, to rescue shipwrecked ladies, to be embraced by Admirals and promoted to Captaincies on their first voyage, after the usual course of affairs with sailors—in dime novels. Enemies of Ocean Cables.

THE amount of submarine life that comes up on a cable which is taken up for repairs after long immersion for a year or two is surprising. Three years ago the writer was with a repairing expedition on the Para to Cayenne section of the Western and Brazilian Company's cables. We were chiefly at work off the island of Marajo, in the estuary of the Amazon. The cable had only been submerged about a month; yet it came on board the ship at places literally covered with barnacles; at others overgrown with submarine vegetation, crabs and curious shells, often of singular delicacy and to the cable sometimes in thick grapes of red and yellow algæ, slender, transparent, feathery grasses, red, slimy fucoids and tufts of amethyst moss. We found branching coralline plants upward of a foot in height growing to the cable, the soft skeleton being covered with a fleshy skin, usually of a deep orange color. Sometimes a sponge was found attached to the roots of these corals, and delicate calcareous structures of varied form incrusted the stems of all these plants, and served to ornament as well as to strengthen them. Parasitic life of many kinds, and under these soft, tepid waters as it is on the neighboring tropical shores. Many star-fishes, zoophytes and curious crabs and crustaceans were likewise fished up on the cable. The crabs were often themselves completely overgrown with the indigenous vegetation of the bottom, and so were scarcely distinguishable from it. Others, although not so covered, were found to have the same tints as the vegetation they inhabited, and even in structure somewhat resembled the latter. Others, again, were perfectly or partially transparent; and one most beautiful hyaline crab, new to science, united in its person several of the prevailing colors of the bottom. Its slender limbs, like jointed filaments of glass, were stained here and there of a deep topaz brown. Its snout, pointed like a needle, was of a deep scarlet; its triangular body was of a deep yellow; its eyes were green; and its tiny limbs of an amethyst blue.

Within a day after this cable had been laid a mysterious fault had occurred, and this we were in pursuit of. To our surprise, we found it to have been caused by the bites of some voracious fish. About thirty miles north of the Para mouth of the Amazon we found the cable bitten in many places, and in some so severely that the iron guard wires had been forcibly crushed aside, the cable penetrated to the conductor, and pieces of the animal's teeth left sticking in the core. Instances of cables having been damaged by the sawfish were known before, both by us and doubtless by our readers. The saw-fish grubbing with its snout in the mud is supposed by Frank Buckland to encounter the cable; and becoming enraged at it, to deal it a sharp downward stroke with its saw, thereby piercing the cable from above, and in certain cases leaving its broken teeth jammed between the wires. But the bites we cut out were evidently due to another fish, for they showed signs of having been made by a direct bite between a pair of powerful jaws. Pieces of teeth were found both on the upper and under side of a bitten place, showing that both jaws had been at work. Of what the fish really is which tries its teeth on such expensive prey, nothing is certainly known.

Fish are not the only large animals which have tried to make a meal or a plaything out of a cable. Underground cables have been found eaten by ruts and mice. In Bristol, a year or two ago, a company of rats made their way into the street pipes, and devoured the gutta-percha covering of the street cables. Not long since, at Dawlish, a mouse built her nest and reared her progeny in one of the street pipes, and apparently supported both herself and her household on the gutta-percha of the wires. No doubt, as the current passed at times while she was gnawing, the little creature felt a tickling sensation of the palate, which fairly puzzled its tiny understanding, and possibly disturbed its innocent feast.

A curious submarine accident occurred a few years ago to the Persian Gulf cable. The cable suddenly broke down fastly. The position of the fault was localized by some shore tests, and a ship dispatched to raise the cable and repair it. It was duly grappled; and, after a great deal of labor, caused by the extraordinary weight of the cable in hauling up, they succeeded in raising it to the surface, when they found, much to their amusement as well as annoyance, that they had "caught a whale." The body of a dead whale was found entangled in the coils of the cable, where the animal had netted and strangled itself.—Harper's Weekly.

Half the Fine Went to Him.

A Belgian bridegroom, being about to start for Paris on his honeymoon tour, was informed by his bride that she thought of concealing several thousand francs' worth of lace about her, hoping by its sale to pay the cost of their journey. The bridegroom was not smitten with this frugal project, and pointed out that there were Custom-House officers and a female searcher at Erequelles, who were themselves notorious for their remunerative fancy for examining passengers' pockets. This he said, being a timid man, and his bride, to humor him, promised to give up her plan; but of course she secreted the lace all the same without telling him about it. Now, as the train approached the French frontier the husband reflected that if his wife were not searched his fears would be crooked at as having been groundless, and he would start on his married career with prestige impaired. This was not desirable. The rather was it desirable that he should, from the very outset, assert his infallibility. So, when the train stopped at Erequelles, and the passengers alighted, the bridegroom left the bride's arm for a moment, and, sidling up to a douanier, whispered: "I think if you search that lady yonder you may find some lace." The douanier winked; the happy bride was accosted with an invitation to walk into the female searcher's room; she turned pale, protested, but was led away, and five minutes later dismal sounds of hysterics were heard. Then the douanier reappeared and said to the horrified husband: "Thank you, sir; it's a good capture. The lady will be taken to prison, and half the fine will go to you."

—A few days ago Mrs. George Hoffman, of Vesper, N. Y., sent her fourteen-year-old son to buy some mustard. She met the boy on the road home. She examined the poison he had obtained and told him to go home, and if his father had not eaten his supper to put a quantity of the drug in his tea. If tea was over, the boy was charged to put the poison in his father's breakfast tea. The boy found that his father had been to tea. Next morning he steeped some of the arsenic in his father's tea. Shortly after drinking it the old man was taken sick. He sent for his wife. She would not go to him. The boy who had given the poison then came for his mother. He told her his father was dead. She started home. On the way she said to her son, taking him by the neck: "If you ever say a word about this I'll kill you the first chance I get." The boy did tell what had been done, however, and he and his mother are in Jail.

—A twelve-year-old boy recently stole a horse in Clover Valley, Cal., rode bareback ten miles and completed his outfit by stealing a saddle, bridle, blanket and revolver from a miner's cabin. He had made up his mind to become a robber, but was arrested while lying in wait for a stage coach.

Fish as Brain Food.

THERE are many men of many minds and many fish of many kinds, therefore there must be a fish adapted to each particular mind.

For instance: For the schoolmaster we should prescribe whale, and for his pupils blubber.

For the cribb—Carp.

For the soldier—Sword-fish and pike.

For the office-seeker—Plaice.

For a shoemaker—Sole.

For a carpenter—Saw-fish.

For a smoker—Pipe-fish and whiff.

For the idiots who cross the ocean in a small boat—Dorce.

For a blacksmith—Bellows-fish.

For lean persons—Chub.

For a sculptor—Sculpin, of course.

For a Lamburger cheese manufacturer—Smelt.

For the boss singer of a minstrel troupe—Black bass.

For a sea Captain—Skipper.

For a brickmaker—Salmon.

For persons who patronize lotteries—Gudgeons.

For dwarfs—Minnows.

For old tapers—Suckers.

Then there is the ember fish for archers, the drum-fish for drummers, the pilot-fish for pilots, the skate for those who can't get over it, and the devil-fish for the editor with a long mane. If a diet of either of these fishes does not increase the quantity of "gray matter," a hole might be drilled in the skull and a fish stuffed in the "whiting" inserted.—Norristown Herald.

A Mighty Hunter.

It has not fallen to the lot of many men to slay nearly 500 tigers—to say nothing of smaller game—in a lifetime, even when one's whole energies have been devoted to such pursuits. M. d'Haranecourt, a Frenchman, who has been pursuing the avocation of a "hunter" in all parts of the world, claims to be the "greatest tiger-killer in the world," and having achieved this reputation, he is now, it appears, reclining on his laurels in the dignified position of Tiger Slayer in General of the Government of the Straits Settlements. He has been engaged, so it is reported, to destroy these animals at £10 per head. An English officer in India, Burton, Probyn, Superintendent of Police in Khandeish, must run the slayer of tigers pretty closely in his claim to the title of champion tiger killer. During the last few years Maj. Probyn has shot no less than 400 tigers in the District of Khandeish alone, and in the immediate neighborhood of these animals which he has secured for the inhabitants of the district has even overcome the suspicion with which the native will receive any kind of English-man who kills a tiger. The destruction of these felines is looked upon by certain classes as an act of sacrilege, certain to be visited with fearful punishments on the village conniving at the act. Maj. Probyn, however, having partially rid the district of the presence of these unwelcome visitors, has earned the gratitude of the inhabitants, and recently, when there was a talk of his leaving the neighborhood, they memorialized the Governor of Bombay not to remove him. Doubtless there are other districts in India in which his presence would be welcome to the people—if unwelcome to the tigers.—Colonies of India.

Harvesting Potatoes.

"Well," says many a reader, "don't anyone know how to dig potatoes?" If they do, but few will in practice it. Many dig them with a sharp hoe, and cut and slash them generally. A potato cut by digging should never be sent to market, for be eaten after it has lain a week. It is sensitive of a wound. Potatoes should be dug when the ground is dry, on pleasant days, and exposed to the sun and light as little as possible. Exposed for a week by laying on a barn floor or in a pile outdoors, they are not worth much price. They grow in the dark, and to keep them right they must be kept in the dark. When put in a cellar that is not very dark they should be covered to keep out the light.

Potatoes should not only be dug carefully, but handled tenderly. The invention of the steel scoop was unfortunate for potatoes. If handled with a scoop, it should be a wooden one. They must not be thrown or poured so as to bruise them. Pouring from a basket into a barrel is injurious, without it is done with care. And the practice frequently resorted to of conducting potatoes from the wagon by a shute into the bins in the cellar should not be tolerated by any careful man.

Digging should be done with a plow, or, if by hand, with a potato-digger, or a broad-tined fork. The Irishman usually takes a sharp-pointed, long-handled shovel, and, if trained, he does it delightfully.—Iowa State Register.

LAST year in Massachusetts 12,736 couples were joined in the bond of wedlock. Of those there were 9,915 bachelors who chose maidens to be their wives, and 608 who chose widows; while 1,396 widowers married maidens and 818 married widows. From this it appears that 788 more widowers than widows were married again, and that the favorite married widowers, when only 608 bachelors married widows.

THE proper way to take vacation is as we go along. A day of recreation or a couple of hours or so every day devoted to rest and entire forgetfulness of business cares, will sandwich labor so pleasantly and healthfully that strength will be preserved and life invigorated to a remarkable degree.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, proper, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Home production for home consumption is the key-note of success in a State, a town, or in a family.—Exchange.

—It is folly to think that after a man has exhausted everything else, he can fall back on farming. He vainly imagines that any good, common, intelligent man can make a good and successful farmer without any particular previous study or experience.—Iowa State Register.

—Dissolve common salt in water, sprinkle the same over your manure heap, and the volatile parts of the ammonia will become fixed salts, from their having united with the muriatic acid of the common salt, and the soda thus liberated from the salt will quickly absorb carbonic acid, forming carbonate of soda; thus you will retain with your manure the ammonia that would otherwise fly away, and you have a new and important agent introduced, viz., the carbonate of soda, which is a powerful solvent of all vegetable fiber.—Chautauqua Farmer.

—The Mexicans have a method of subduing fractious horses and such as are inclined to run away which might be introduced here with profit. A hood or winker is so arranged that the driver or rider can in an instant draw it directly over the eyes of the animal, effectually blindfolding him. When this is done the horse instantly becomes quiet, and a repetition of the blindfolding two or three times gradually results in his becoming quiet and docile. Such an arrangement would be a valuable appendage to the headgear of such horses as are disposed to runaway.—Exchange.

—Pickles made after the following recipe are said to be excellent: Put cucumbers, peppers, etc., in vinegar; a lump of alum, size of an egg, to three gallons; thus leave them two or three weeks, if necessary; then pour off vinegar, and let it come to a boil. Having placed your pickles in stone jars (not glazed) or firkins, with layers of green Savoy cabbage leaves between, leave a week; then repeat, pouring off the vinegar, and boil it, and again another week repeat the boiling. Tie up in thin muslin bags green ginger, horseradish, English mustard-seed, whole pepper, cloves and allspice, and a little garlic; add cassia buds.

Autumn Care of Stock.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman makes the following suggestions:

The critical seasons of thrift of our cattle and farm stock are the times of changing from pasture to hay and from hay to grass—fall or spring. It becomes all thrifty farmers therefore to bridge over these seasons to the best possible advantage; and in no way can it be better done than by good feeding just previous to and during the transition stages. Many farmers who practice this principle regard as great profit from their cows in the fall as at any other season, and get, if we except the first greatest rush and flow, a full average of milk. In the fall there are pumpkins, which are one of the best milk and flesh producers and sustainers when judiciously fed in conjunction with other feed, as cornstalks and other matter abundant at this season, which it is impracticable to husband in winter. Much of this costs very much less to produce than the hay, grain, or other feed stored away for winter feed, and is better for present feeding than these, and will produce more and better milk, while the condition of the stock is improved and the system better sustained if full fed.

Extra fall feeding should be begun when grass begins to grow short; to be increased as the grass diminishes in quantity and quality. Where this system of feeding is practiced, cows will keep up for several weeks their flow of milk (till January or later), giving a handsome profit in milk and butter. The farmer whose cows not avail himself of the advantage of extra fall feeding, finds his cows begin to diminish with the decrease of pasture, and shrink largely with the first cuttings from gradually shrinking till they dry off in December or earlier. A good hard frost generally uses up grass and forage, so that there is very little nutriment left in it; and although cattle may apparently lift themselves (plump and full), nevertheless they actually shrink in flesh, for enough nutriment to sustain the system cannot be obtained. It is unwise for any farmer to cause his stock to depend almost entirely upon such grazing, giving them perhaps an occasional feed of some poorer quality of roots. Regularity in extra feeding should be the rule.

Many farmers have large quantities of apples, which they are at a loss what to do with, or perhaps they have roots, cabbages, etc., all which can be safely fed to milch-cows and other stock, if their allowance of salt is increased. Let no farmer think that because this can be done advantageously, that it may be indiscriminately or injudiciously done. An excess or full quantity given at once to begin on, will set the same on the animal as on the human system. The way to do is to begin with a small quantity, and gradually increase from day to day till you have fed the animals all they will eat. An illustration of ill effects of over-eating apples by cows unaccustomed to them lately occurred with an acquaintance, where the cows broke into an orchard and ate all the apples they chose. They shrank and falled in their milk. Let a child eat as many apples as it can force down, not being accustomed to them, and see what would be the result. Had these same cows been fed apples, and gradually accustomed to them, such result would not have occurred, even had they eaten all they could. Of course, excesses are to be avoided when possible, but what is here meant is that comparative results are very different.

In the fall, then, the prudent farmer will improve his time and all his advantages; but he should not wait, but begin with summer and spring. He should plan his work beforehand; pumpkins and roots must be started in spring or at their appropriate season. The man with a single cow often understands and practices something of this, and thereby obtains correspondingly profitable returns. What this man does with his one cow, the other man with his herd may do proportionally in a similar manner. Not only is their profit in thus feeding cows, but similar profit is gained by feeding all other farm-stock correspondingly well. Good stock in the fall is a first requisite, the keeping it good is the second; the regular attendance is the main thing. Any irregularity is injurious. It is safe to crop out and tell the tale. If our stock pass the transition of spring and fall safely, they will run smoothly and be approhended during the other seasons; therefore it is wise to see to it and provide for these critical seasons.

Gen. Sheridan's Annual Report.

Gen. Sheridan's report to Gen. Sherman relative to the military operations in the Division of the Missouri during the past year, has been made public. The more important and interesting portions are as follows:

There has been no change in the organization of the Division during the past year. It consists of the following departments, viz.: The Department of Dakota, embracing within its limits the State of Minnesota and Territories of Montana and Dakota, with twenty-five permanent posts and three encampments of observation, commanded by Brevet-Maj.-Gen. John Gibbon. In the temporary absence of Brig.-Gen. Alfred H. Terry, the Department of the Platte, embracing the States of Iowa and Nebraska, the Territories of Wyoming and Utah and a portion of Idaho, with twenty-one permanent posts and two camps of observation, commanded by Brig.-Gen. George Crook; the Department of the Missouri, embracing the States of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Colorado, the Territory of New Mexico and the Indian Territory, and the posts of Fort Bliss and Fort Elliott, in Texas, with twenty-four permanent posts, commanded by Brig.-Gen. John Pope; the Department of Texas, embracing the State of Texas, with thirteen permanent forts and numerous camps of observation, commanded Brig.-Gen. E. O. C. Ord.

To garrison these eighty-two permanent posts and camps of observation, the Inspector-General completes four companies of artillery, averaging fifty-three men each, eight regiments of cavalry, averaging 765 men each, and eighteen regiments of infantry, averaging 459 men each, which, as will be seen by the reports of Gens. Ord and Gibbon, give in only one man to 120 square miles in the Department of Texas, and one to every seventy-five square miles in the Department of Dakota, and about the same ratio in the Departments of the Platte and the Missouri. When it is borne in mind that the immense section of country that has to be constantly under surveillance against Indians and roaming parties from the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, the work that has to be performed by that portion of our army located within the Military Division will be fully appreciated by all military men, and by those who have ever strolled upon our frontier.

The Indian situation at the present time is, I am sorry to say, unsatisfactory. In the Dakota Department, owing to want of sufficient appropriation or from wretched mismanagement, has failed to feed the Sioux on the Western country constant anxiety during the last year, and in some places loss of life and loss of property, attended with dreadful crimes and cruelties. There has been an insufficiency of food at the agencies, and, as the cause is gone, hunger has made the Indians in some cases desperate, and almost any two of men will fight rather than starve. It seems to me, with the immense sums that the amounts appropriated by Congress ought to the sufficient, if practically applied to the objects purposes specified, and if the supplies are regularly delivered, but the reports of the Department Commanders forwarded herewith would indicate a different result, except in the case of the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail bands of Sioux, who, although threatening in their conduct, have been the best supplied, and have been induced until their present insolence constantly threatens to bring about a breach of the peace.

The General at length reviews the situation of the Indians ten years ago, and the causes which have led to their present unhappy condition. At that time their wants were satisfied.

But, alas for the poor savage, along came the nineteenth century progress, or whatever it may be called, to disturb their happy condition. The white men crowded into the grounds of the Indians and made encroachments on their rights which no Government could stop. Armies of adventurers in the first sent to protect the Indians, but such attempts were powerless. The Government made treaties, gave presents, made promises, none of which were honestly fulfilled, and these restless savages within the limits of their reservations.

The General glances at "the benefits which have accrued to progress and civilization by the misfortunes of the poor red man in the last ten years," viz., the construction of various railways, the development of the mineral wealth in Central Colorado and the San Juan country in Southern Colorado; also that of the mines in Utah, Montana, the Black Hills, New Mexico and other points, which development has thrown into circulation, by the process of labor and the purchase of machinery, supplies and transportation, millions upon millions of dollars, to say nothing of the millions taken out of the earth by manual labor and the aid of machinery.

Then, again, let us take a view of the cattle interests. Ten years ago our grazing grounds were in Texas, now they are from the southern boundary of Dakota to the Gulf of Mexico, and I may safely say that parts of Wyoming and Montana furnish a range affording as good, if not better, grazing than in Texas, and these lands are covered by interests of better class. The number of cattle now north of Texas and west of the Missouri River is perhaps fully or nearly equal to that in Texas, and only ten years ago there was scarcely a head.

Let us now look at the agricultural developments. Northern Texas has been filled with hundreds of herds of cattle from the South and North. Kansas has had an extraordinary influx unparalleled—the emigration being almost by the hundred thousand per year. Nebraska has also come in for a large share of emigration, while Colorado, Utah and Wyoming are not far behind in acquiring population. Central and Northern Texas, Middle and Western Kansas, and Nebraska and Utah, are all treading with agricultural prosperity. This population, numbering probably 2,000,000 men engaged in mining, grazing and agricultural pursuits, pay taxes, builds farm-houses and constructs fences, plows up the ground, erects school-houses and founds villages, towns, etc., and the millions obtained by the sweat of their brow all to south more to the trade, commerce and prosperity of the world; and all this comes from the development of a country which only ten years ago was the land of the Indian, the buffalo and the elk.

The report closes with a brief summary of the present condition of affairs on the Mexican border, with recommendations for the better protection of life and property in Texas.

Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Hon. J. A. Bentley, Commissioner of Pensions, has completed his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, showing the operations of the Pension Service during the fiscal year ended June 30, and making sundry recommendations for the benefit of the soldiers. Washington dispatch gives the following synopsis:

The number of new claims of all classes filed during the year was 87,360. Of these, 18,812 were original claims for invalid pensions, since which time the number of the same class filed in either of the four years from 1871 to 1874; 18,340 were for the War of 1812 service, under the act of March 9, 1878. About one-eighth of these claims were in behalf of widows, the remainder were widows' claims; 48,764 claims were settled, at an average cost to the Government of $10.15 per case. The average cost in 1877 was $12.81, and in 1876 $17.11.

The saving through the increased efficiency of the office, including the reduction in the salary appropriation of $68,500 in 1877 over 1876, was $185,000, and for 1878 over 1876, including the reduction in the salary fund of $67,500, was $340,172. The number of cases settled in 1877 was 22¼ per cent. greater than in 1876, and in 1878, 50 per cent. greater than in 1876. At the beginning of the year the number of agencies for paying pensions was, by order of the President, reduced from fifty-eight to eighteen, saving in salaries for the year $142,000. The aggregate saving to the bureau for the year in reduced payment to agents, and in all exceptions and reduction in the number of agencies, was $482,172; adding $180,000 for 1877, the aggregate saving for the two years in these items alone has been $662,332.

On the 30th of June, 1878, there were 223,098 pensioners on the rolls, a reduction of 2,045 during the year. It is expected that the number of pensioners will considerably increase during the current year, on account of the late increases. Exclusive of the fees of Examining Surgeons, and the fees and salaries of Pension Agents, the amount paid for pensions during the year was $36,570,792. Of this amount, $240,991 was retained from the pensioners and paid to Claim Agents for their fees.

Starting a Boy.

A lonesome-looking boy was yesterday hanging around a wood-yard in the northern part of the city, when the proprietor of the yard, having both charity and philanthropy for him with which it is their eyes, asked the lad why he didn't peddle apples or do something to earn a few shillings. The boy replied that he had no capital, and the wood-yard man took out a nickel and said:

"Now, my boy, I'm going to start you in life. Take this nickel and go and make a purchase of something or other. I'll buy it of you for ten cents, no matter what it is. Come, now, let's see what sort of a business head you have on you."

The boy took the nickel and went off, but in ten minutes was back with a gallon-jug, which he had purchased with the nickel.

"Well, you are a keener," replied the man. "I never saw one of those sold for less than fifteen cents to anyone. I want such a jug, and here's its price. Go now and lay out your fifteen cents in apples and I'll buy half your stock."

The boy did not return. Perhaps he fell into a sewer somewhere; but you can't make the wood-yard man believe so. When he lifted the jug from under the table, where the boy had carefully placed it, he found a whole in the bottom large enough to let in a black-and-tan terrier.—Detroit Free Press.

Resolutions Adopted by the Prophetic Conference.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.

The Prophetic Conference held its last session to-day. Mr. Reynolds, of Peoria, presiding. The Rev. C. H. Cravin read a paper on "The Relation of the Pre-Millennial Advent of Christ to the Catholic Doctrine of the Work of the Holy Spirit." The Rev. Dr. Cooper, of the Presbyterian Seminary, Allegheny, Pa., followed with a paper on "The Judgment," and the Rev. N. West, D.D., of Cincinnati, addressed the Conference on "The History of Doctrine."

The Committee on Resolutions appointed at the morning session presented the following:

Before closing this Conference, composed of brethren from so many different branches of the one redeemed Church of our Lord, we desire disclaiming whatever doctrines have been or may be held in connection with the belief of the pre-millennial of our Lord which, together with the faith now delivered to the saints and received by the Church Universal among the ages, and to bear our united testimony to that which we believe to be the truth of the Gospel in particulars which follow, viz.:

1. We affirm our belief in the supreme and absolute authority of the written Word of God on questions of doctrine and duty.

2. The prophetic words of the Old Testament concerning the first coming of our Lord Jesus Christ were literally fulfilled in Him in His humanity, Sufferings, death and resurrection; the prophetic words of both the Old and New Testaments concerning His second coming will be literally fulfilled in His bodily coming to the earth in like manner as He went into heaven. We do not however, and can give no definite time for that coming, but we believe that the blessed hope of the believing Church is that the same Jesus who ascended into heaven will so come in like manner as He went into heaven.

3. The second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ is every where represented in the Scriptures as personal and visible, and not by the spread of the gospel day and hour thereof is unknown to angels, known only to God.

4. The Scriptures teach clearly that the whole world will be converted to the faith of the Lord, be a reign of universal righteousness and peace before the return of our blessed Lord; but that only at and by His coming in power and glory will the prophecies concerning the universal reign of evil and the development of Anti-Christ, the times of the Gentiles and the restoration of Israel, the resurrection of the dead in Christ and the translation of the living saints, be literally fulfilled and the period of millennial blessedness introduced.

5. The duty of the Church during the absence of our Bridegroom is to watch and pray, to labor and wait, to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, and thus hasten the coming of the day of God, and, in His latest message, "I come quickly." To which the Church responds, "Even so, come Lord Jesus."

The report was unanimously adopted. Then the whole Conference rising to vote.

The following, offered by the Rev. H. Brookes, was also adopted:

Resolved, That the doctrine of our Lord's pre-millennial advent, instead of paralyzing Evangelistic and missionary efforts, is one of the mightiest incentives to earnestness in preaching the Gospel to every creature.—All Heralds.

Addresses were then made by Maj D. W. Whittle, of Chicago; the Rev. Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, and the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr. They all commented on the glorious work and success of the Conference.

The Rev. Dr. Baxley, of Hull, Eng., made the closing address, which was powerful and eloquent.

Dr. Baxley will hail the power of Jesus' name," the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Lord, and the Conference adjourned finally.

Thanksgiving Day.

President Hayes has issued the following proclamation:

The appearance at this season at which it is the habit of our people to make devout and grateful acknowledgment of their constant dependence upon Divine favor for all the good gifts of life and happiness, and of public peace and prosperity, calls for a fresh record of the many abundant reasons for our gratitude and thanksgiving. Exuberant harvests, productive mines, ample crops of the staples of trade and manufactures, have enriched the country, the resources thus furnished to our energetic industry and expanding commerce hastening the day when discords and distresses, through the length and breadth of the land, will make the continued favor of Providence, have given way to confidence, and energy and assured prosperity.

Peace with all Nations has remained unbroken; domestic tranquility has prevailed, and the institutions of liberty and justice, which the wisdom and justice of our forefathers established remain the glory and defense of their children.

The general prevalence of the blessings of health throughout our wide land has made more conspicuous the sufferings and sorrows which the dark shadow of the pestilence has cast upon a portion of our people. This heavy affliction, even the Divine Ruler has tempered to the suffering communities with an universal sympathy and succor which have flowed to their relief, and the whole nation may rejoice in the unity of spirit in our people which they cheerfully share another's burdens.

Now, therefore, I, Rutherford B. Hayes President of the United States, do appoint Thursday, the 28th day of November next, as a day of National Prayer and Thanksgiving, and I earnestly recommend that, withdrawing from secular cares and employments, the people meet together on that day in their respective dwellings. The love reunited that we had no capital, and the wood-yard man took out a nickel and said:

"Now, my boy, I'm going to start you in life. Take this nickel and go and make a purchase of something or other. I'll buy it of you for ten cents, no matter what it is. Come, now, let's see what sort of a business head you have on you."

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A farmer of Reno County, Kan., coming across a rattlesnake, tied his reins in a bunch and killed it therewith. Subsequently he untied the knot with his teeth, and the poison thus got into his system and drove him mad.

—A family of emigrants on the way to Texas camped over night in Sedalia, Mo. In the morning the man packed all the things in the wagon to continue the journey, except his aged mother-in-law, whom he left at the side of the road. However, a mass-meeting compelled him to take her along.

—An unknown man applied for a piece of bread at a house in East Fifty-second street, in New York City, the other night, and was refused. He said he was starving, and staggered away with feeble steps. He fell in front of No. 328, in the same street, and when approached he was found to be dead.

—In 1862, a young man of Bastrop, Tex., enlisted in the Union Army, leaving behind him his sweetheart, a beautiful girl of sixteen. No letters came from him after Chancellorville, but two weeks ago he returned after many adventures in foreign lands, claimed the hand of the lady, who had remained faithful to his memory, and was quietly married in a week.

—Joseph Langendorf, of Chicago, met with a very singular accident, the other day, as he stood in the doorway of his store, on Clark street. Above him, at the second story windows, was a glazier repairing a broken window. Suddenly a light of glass descended, cutting off Mr. Langendorf's nose in transit. The severed member was promptly sewed on again, and serious results were not expected to ensue.

—Mike Foley was a Montana desperado, and when he said he would kill Mrs. Frederick, she believed it. One day he approached the cabin, and she sent for her husband. Frederick hurried to the house in time to prevent injury to his wife, but received a bullet in his own breast from Foley's pistol. However, he knocked the villain down with a stick. Up to this time Frederick had not spoken a word, but he advanced to the table and, placing both hands on its said: "I am shot, and cannot live two minutes. Run for your life or Foley will kill you." She refused, saying: "I cannot leave you." He again said: "It is useless, you can do nothing for me; save yourself." Observing Foley getting up, she rushed out of the front door and ran to the brush on the creek, where she hid, and finally escaped. Frederick died.

—None of us can know how we would act in a supreme moment of peril and agony. Edgar Poe or Victor Hugo could not have imagined a form of death more completely calculated to test the victim's fortitude than the terrible scene which terminated the life of one Conlan, at Norwich, last Friday night. Conlan, who was a pisciculturalist in that city, was walking on the railway track at Norwich Falls, at a point where there is a double switch, and accidentally had one foot caught in a "frog," in such a way that he was unable to extricate it. The Boston express-train was coming at full speed, and Conlan, finding himself unable to escape his doom, half turned, in his agonized position, and faced the engine (literally an engine of death) in a defiant way, and almost smiled as it struck him. His body was frightfully mangled—almost literally torn to pieces under the remorseless wheels—and when picked up it presented a horrifying sight. A part of his clothing, in which was his revolver, was torn from him by the engine and carried to Willimantic, before it was discovered.—Hartford Times.

Cured of Drinking.

"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor, that had so prostrated his system that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It altered all that burning thirst, took away the appetite for liquor; made his nerves steady, and restored him to health. I have also a man for more than two years, and has no desire to relapse. I have known of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. R. Official, Chicago, Ill.

Are Fat People Healthy?

Why are fat people always complaining? asks somebody who entertains the very singular though erroneous notion that health is synonymous with fat. Fat people complain because they are diseased. Fat is an abnormal condition of the system, in which the saccharine and albuminous elements of the food are assimilated, to the partial exclusion of the nervine-feeding and brain-producing elements. In proof of this, it is only necessary to assert the well-known fact that excessively fat people are never strong, and seldom distinguished for mental powers or activity. Besides, they are the easy prey of acute and epidemic diseases, and they are the frequent victims of sunstroke, heart disease, and apoplexy. Allsop's Anti-Fat is the only known remedy for this disease. It contains no acid, is absolutely harmless, and is warranted to remove the most confirmed case of obesity, or corpulency.

It is demonstrated that America makes the best Cabinet or Parlor Organs in the world. At all world's exhibitions in recent years Mason & Hamlin have obtained highest honors, having received the gold medal at the Paris Exposition of 1878.

VEGETINE.

For Nervousness, Sleepless Nights.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12, 1877.

Dear Sir:—I do not believe in patent medicine, nor would I let me a friendship but I consider it no more than my duty to speak well of Vegetine, believing it to be an honest medicine, and deserving a better position of it. My entire misfortune was produced from a severe fall upon the sidewalk over-crossing which left me nervous prostrated for a long time. Having exhausted the skill of the best physicians without relief, I was induced to try Vegetine, and thought I would give it a trial, with little faith, I will admit; but to my surprise and great relief, before I had taken one bottle I found that I was getting better, and by the use of three bottles my difficulty. It rest and natural brain power returned, and I found myself able to attend to business once more. I have since used it in my family for my sometime result in a disease of that kind, and I am pleased to say that it has never failed in a single instance. I am now using it for a severe cough, which I have had for some time, and I have no doubt but what it will relieve me. I have also used it for my children, and have found it to be a most excellent remedy for children's complaints, and can recommend it to all who may be afflicted with any of the diseases for which it is recommended. Yours truly,

H. H. STEVENS.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of inter or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case where it will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and certified out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses, for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in different as" long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamps each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle, as my private stamp is not on each bottle, do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, NOV. 12, - - 1878.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Oct. 31, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

A curious little conflict in mid air was occasioned the other day by the efforts of workmen employed upon the Western Union Building to take down the big red globe known as the "time ball," whose fall from top to bottom of the flagstaff of this towering structure daily informs inquiring New York of the moment of noon. The old time ball having become in some respect defective, was therefore set upon as above intimated. No sooner, however, had the hands of the brave workmen touched the ball than they were attacked by a cloud of hornets who had previously this dizzy dwelling place, and who, after having gone to the expense of furnishing and fitting up the hollow globe in the latest style known to their kind, by no means relished these summary ejectment proceedings. The battle was an unequal one, the hornets easily getting the best of it until the odds occurred to the besiegers of going below and swiftly raising and lowering the ball. This movement proved successful. The astonished insects tried for a while to follow the erratic movements of their agile domicile, but soon gave up in disgust and flew off in search of some more stable residence.

I feel like apologizing for again referring to that eternal Vanderbilt will trial, but one bit of the testimony of this week is rather interesting. It seems to be clearly proven that the old gentleman was a confirmed spiritualist, and spent a good deal of time and money on ghostly communications; and it is testified that on one occasion he sought and obtained through a medium an interview with the late lamented Jim Fisk. He inquired the future price of certain stocks, and promptly received an answer, purporting to come from the "Prince of Erie." He appeared highly dissatisfied, however, with the prophecy from the spirit world, and expressed his determination to trust to his own judgment instead. After this the Commodore asked Fisk whether he liked his new abode, and delicately inquired after the climate; to which Jim gave a somewhat testy reply, to the effect that he didn't quite like his quarters, and that the Commodore would soon have an opportunity to "know how it was himself."

To the long and somewhat monotonous list of defalcations and embezzlements to which this city is the most fruitful contributor, we now add the case of George W. Hoxie, for the last five years Assistant U. S. District Attorney in Brooklyn. As usual, the revelation of the man's misconduct was entirely unexpected, and the culprit well-known and highly respected. From a letter which he sent to the press on the eve of his disappearance it seems that Mr. Hoxie was led into Wall street speculations some years since, and being unfortunate therein, began using money which came into his official hands, and has ever since pursued the same system of peculation. At last, finding longer concealment impossible, he writes a letter of confession and absconds.

What sameness there is in all these stories of weakness and crime, and what a mystery it is to those of those of us who have never been subjected to similar temptations, that men of intelligence, of ability, of refinement, of high family and social standing, can enter, or having entered, deliberately pursue a path that is thickly strewn with the moral corpses of their predecessors, and the ruinous end of which lies plainly and unmistakably before them?

Carver, the rifleman, turns up an eloquent nose at the Creedmoor style of shooting. He says that he yet to meet the deer or Indian who would feel it an honour to be asked to stand at ease and wait for an enemy to drop upon his back, cross his legs, push the butt of his rifle against his right cheek, clasping the stock with his left hand thrown behind his head, rest the muzzle over his knees, adjust his wind gauge and elevation before pulling the trigger. Carver is of the opinion that any well regulated Indian would have a dozen scalps in his belt during the time occupied by the Creedmoor rifleman's preparation, while while the deer would probably cast a pitying look back as he leisurely imbued one of his ears with a kind leg and stroll smilingly away. But the distinguished rifleman forgets that the average Creedmoor sportsman is not fitting for work on the plains. The range was established for target shooting, and when Jackson, or Jewell, or Patton hits the bull's eye he accomplishes precisely what he attempted to do, whether he attains a position looking like an inclined "X" or not. Neither should a rifle lose sight of the fact that there is no sport freer from objections than rifle shooting. No one with nerves unstrung by dissipation can hope to compete. The hand must be steady and the eye and judgment clear, for without these requirements no man can hope to enter the lists as a successful rifleman.

Every now and again somebody turns up here with a story about a fortune which he or she is about to come into as the "long lost" child, relative or descendant of some old Croesus who has been dead for many yrs. The public are duly regaled with a glowing account of the claimant's claims and prospects, and then the whole matter drops out of sight, the claimant usually being a lunatic or an imposter. We are just now going through one of these periodical attacks. The hero in this case is a bluff and weatherbeaten old sailor named Morgan, who has come all the way down from Maine to look after a little trifle of $1,500,000 which he says clearly belongs to him as heir of some old chap who lived in New York far back of the memory of this generation, and which he will doubtless get—when the sky falls.

It may or may not be a source of satisfaction to your readers to learn that the much mooted question as to whether there is or is not a place of eternal punishment has been settled at last. The synod of the reformed Episcopal Church, recently adjourned, emphatically declared that there is a hell. There was but little discussion of the point. One or two soft hearted brethren ventured to suggest that perhaps it might be as well to allow a little latitude to believers, and to permit them to think either way according to their several persons and consciences, but these were incontinently "stepped on" by the sugnat body, and the dogma was recorded in its most uncompromising form.

And, by the way, speaking of theological matters, Mr. Beecher has just got back from his long vacation and lecturing tour in the West, heavier in body and in pocket, and brim full of health and eloquence. Brother Talmage, since his detective work amid the slums of New York, has so risen in the estimation of his flock, that his salary has been raised from $7,000 to 12,000 per year. So Talmage is happy, and is even more vigorous than before in his denunciations of vice and worldliness generally.

RADIX.

No feature of the late election news will give to the friends of honest government and civil order more sincere gratification than the verdict of the Bay State on General Butler's candidacy for Governor. His raid on the magistracy of that great commonwealth was so carefully planned, so audacious in execution, and so dangerous in its methods and its tendencies that its defeat promised at first to be a matter both of great difficulty and of great importance. But the candidate who in this fight embodied in himself so peculiarly and thoroughly Kearneyism, Nationalism, and demagogism, with all that the names imply, was decisively rejected by Massachusetts, notwithstanding the adroitness of his tactics and the vigor of his appeals.

The possibilities of what would have followed Butler's election give to this result a far greater importance than attaches to the mere question of who should sit in the executive chamber at Boston. Had he carried Massachusetts, the cause of the American assignat and a dishonored credit, with which he saw fit to identify his large abilities have received a formidable impetus, and under his shrewd and bold leadership have constituted a most important factor in the Presidential contest of 1880. But that dream of dangerous ambition is gone. Its illusions may hang about the dreamer; they will not disturb the American people.

Massachusetts rejected the proposals of the widow Butler. It was not leap year.

Kearney may return to the Pacific coast.

The "Nationals" appear to have put forth too much exertion last spring.

The Solid South is less formidable than it was. Still, it will bear watching

The "National" party seems to be most formidable in the South. If we must have the boil, that is precisely the spot where it can be most conveniently accommodated.

The General Outlook.

If under the banner of resumption, the Republican party, beginning its campaign in the midst of hard times, and with its discipline everywhere relaxed, and its ranks more or less disorganized, has closed its ranks, restored its discipline, and carried every one of the Northern States except Indiana, what party can hope to stand before it after resumption is accomplished and good times are restored? It may now be set down as almost a certainty that the President elected in 1880 will be Republican, and that he will be backed by a Republican Congress. The solid South is already offset by a nearly unbroken Republican North and West.

In 1862-3, in the midst of the War for the Union, the Republican party experienced great reverses—reverses that would have overwhelmed it if there had been any Southern vote to aid the Democratic party. But the dark period passed away, and was succeeded by a glorious period of splendid triumphs. As the Republican contest for the preservation of the Union against secession was marked by a period of depression and reverses, so now, in the struggle for the preservation of the national faith and honor, the party has had a dark period of reverses, and is now emerging into the dawn of a better and brighter day. The contest has been long, the fight severe, and the issue has sometimes appeared doubtful; "but ever the right comes uppermost, and ever the wrong goes down" before those who struggle in an honest cause, amid an intelligent and patriotic people, with a courage and earnestness worthy of their high faith.

It is but the bare truth to say that, if the American people had deliberately voted in favor of partial repudiation, violation of the national faith toward its creditors, and for the wild theories of inflation and flat currency, the principle of self government through the popular vote would have received, at least for a time, a telling blow. In this contest the stability and success of a republican form of government has been almost as conspicuously on trial before the nations of the earth as it was during the throes of tremendous civil war. Indeed, there have not been wanting foreign observers who wagged their heads with a great assumption of superior wisdom, and predicted that, though a republic, under the stress of passionate patriotism, could defend its life with tremendous power against the attacks of armed rebellion, it could not bear the cold slow, unexciting strain required to pay its debts and preserve its financial honor. The United States is showing these critics their error.— Post & Tribune.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and sweetness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Chamberlain, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

The $3,000,000-Bank Robbery in New York.

NEW YORK, Oct. 27.

Between six and nine o'clock this morning masked burglars entered the Manhattan Savings Bank building, corner Broadway and Bleecker street, and, after handcuffing the janitor, made away with sixty thousand dollars, leaving the condolutions of the safe-makers who had delivered the goods behind the bank. They rifled the safe of presumably a large amount of money, as twenty-three boxes known to have contained bills were found on the floor quite empty.

At 9:30 o'clock, Wendel Reshman, who keeps a barber shop in the basement, was startled by the appearance at the basement stairs of the janitor, Louis Wyckoff, white with fright and excitement, with his hands handcuffed tightly and the key of the bank clutched between them. He was quite unable to speak for a few minutes, but finally cried: Come and see!" The barber accompanied him into the bank, and saw the doors of the great vault wide open and the floor littered with the boxes, all emptied of their contents. Burglar-Detective Jacob Perry then arrived. The burglars notified the police, who soon appeared.

The janitor's statement was to the effect that at 8:40, while he was dressing, seven masked men suddenly entered his private room and handcuffed him and his wife, and demanded the keys of the bank. Mrs. Wyckoff, unbidden, also fell, who was present, screamed, when the burglars drew pistols and threatened to kill her unless she was made quiet. They then carried him into an adjoining room and bound him to the floor up the keys of the steel doors. With these they went down the stairs by way of testing three on guard in his room. Three hours passed, until Wetted heard a clock strike nine, just then one of the men came down the stairs returned, and after a whispered consultation, they left the bank. Soon he regained his courage he went to the barber shop and told his story. Superintendent Walling that he had given the combination of the unlocking of the doors, of the vault to the robbers. He gave it until eleven o'clock to-day, but he failed to see that he got anything by the combination. His wife corroborated his story of the attack, but said there were only five men in the party. Mr. Lent, a Broadway merchant, passed the bank soon after seven A. M., and saw a young man dusting the shelves and desks inside. It is supposed this was one of the burglars, endeavoring to make things look as natural as possible. Officers Van Norton and Tully said they looked through the bank about seven minutes and seven o'clock, and all was quiet. The vault had not been open then. Inside the main doors of the safe vault the burglars found the spare vault which was also open, and the safe boxes filled with jewelry, silverware and valuable papers. These they emptied. The overlooked safe was also sacked, containing $50,000 in valuables, the property of Edward Merrill, President of the bank. The open space, six feet between the main door of the vault and the safe, was where the gang gave the burglars ample space to work in. Over one compartment containing $11,000 in small bills, was found the bottom of the cotton drawer, but got nothing of value therefrom. The robbery must have become public property before to-day, as they were trying to leave when they were evidently disturbed. A dozen drills, a sledge-hammer, three crowbars, and various other tools were found scattered around. The officers of the bank admit that the burglars possessed the combination to the vault. It is thought that they got away in a hack, which was seen by the police and make ready for business. The officers of the bank are Edward Merrill, President, and Thomas Cock, Jr., Secretary. The following is the bank officers' list:

"The Manhattan Savings Institution was, on the morning of the 28th inst., found to be robbed of securities to the amount of $2,757,-700, of which $2,468,700 were registered in the name of the bank, and $289,000 in coupon bills, and $188,000 are made payable to it, and $370,000 are in coupon bonds, and $71,000 in cash. For the purpose of preventing loss to depositors, it is deemed advisable that no payment be made without sixty days' notice, as provided by the by-laws of the institution."

A New York special of the 28th says: "It is asserted, despite the officials' reticence, that at least sixty safe-breakers in this city intrust the safe combinations to their pardners."

Although the bank and other clubs of the city (30 of the 17,380 depositors have notified the bank of a desire to withdraw their accounts.

"As to losses, the bank officers say the depositors, with one exception, had no realized the situation. Inter-stage, and their papers and securities were left undisturbed. One man claims a loss of $7,000 in notes. The burglars, however, got only $11,000 in cash, and $87,500 in securities that can be realized upon when the thieves have been detected."

AMONG the things the applicant knew about and not about was the luminous soil to be depleted by sand or clay. Thus the fields seem to send up the prayer for neither poverty nor riches. But there is safer ground than such analogy. It is not probable that the Creator of the world would make that the worst condition in which the larger part of His children must pass life.

If we discover a condition which must absorb the millions, and if we find two other conditions, that of perpetual want of the stunted dozens, that of great wealth of the stunted dozens, that of comfortable competence, which are being constantly emptied into the middle class of liberty and industry and intelligence, it may be inferred, that God has not made most pitiable that estate in which the most millions are to be grouped. The "middle condition" reeks with heroic struggle. While at the barn he went into the hayloft, and fell through the hatchway, receiving injuries from which he died shortly after.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

"NOW I LAY ME."

Bed-time for the twittering birdies,
Mother Wren has hushed to rest;
Bed-time for my little birdies,
Nestled closely to my breast.
Now beside me, lowly kneeling,
Hear the lisping tongue repeat—
Dear old prayer of border nursery—
"Now I lay me down to sleep."

With that trusting grace, and tender,
Ere the petition make?
"Pray the Lord to take my spirit,
If I die before I wake."
And so thought of dread comes over me,
As I kiss her sweet "good night."
We're so careless of our darlings
Till we lay them out of sight!

Once again 'tis bimbin's bed-time;
Little neighbors in the tree
Mingle their lullabies to slumber,
With no thought of lonely me.
All my mother arms encompass,
Draped in sadness all the room,
And no whispered "Now I lay me"
Breaks upon the twilight gloom.

Smooth and white the little pillow,
Undisturbed the pretty bed!
On the table be her playthings,
Mute reminders of her dead.
For no more my little treasure
My sad eyes shall fondly keep;
In the Heavenly Father's bosom
I have laid her down to sleep.

Over-tenderly the morning mother,
Mantuming and sick at heart,
Full of joy shall be the waking,
When the Resurrection part
Three well find our garmered treasures,
Frozen all into earth-cares free,
Where no sad good-by shall pain us
Through a long eternity.

WAITING.

Learn to wait—life's hardest lesson,
Counsel, perchance, through blinding tears;
While the heartbeats coldly echo
To the tread of passing years.

Learn to wait hope's slow fruition;
Faint not though the way seem long;
There is joy in each condition,
Hearts, though suffering, may grow strong.

Constant sunshine, however welcome,
Never would ripen fruit or flower;
Giant oaks owe half their greatness
To the scathing tempest's power.

Thus a soul, untouched by sorrow,
Aims but little, lacks depth, color;
Joy seeks not a brighter morrow,
Only sad hearts learn to wait.

Human strength and human greatness
Spring not from life's sunny side,
Heroes must be more than gifted,
Floating on a wayless tide.

NEITHER POVERTY NOR RICHES.

Give me neither poverty nor riches * * * * lest I be fulland deny Thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor and steal, and thus profane the name of my God.—Prov. xxx:8, 9.

While I am not a believer in "class" has long existed in the world; has been so large in numbers and so great in influence, and for the most part so happy, that there must be in it certain philosophy of that condition. Such a constant and immense form of human life cannot be the result of chance, but must be rather a part of the method of Him who placed man upon this planet. The prayer of Agur reveals the existence of a second estate as far back as history runs. The constant presence of this class, its quality in all times, and at last its immense numbers, make it worthy of our study.

The moderate prosperity man should a priori be the most fortunate, because all through Nature the law of the golden mediocrity holds. Nature dislikes excesses. It is fond of averages. A shrub below the forest gets too little light; a tree above the forest is blown down. The fierce, therefore, stand and securities were left undisturbed. One man claims a loss of $7,000 in notes. The burglars, however, got only $11,000 in cash, and $87,500 in securities that can be realized upon when the thieves have been detected."

AMONG the things the applicant knew about and not about was the luminous soil to be depleted by sand or clay. Thus the fields seem to send up the prayer for neither poverty nor riches. PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Mr. Sankey will join Mr. Moody in revival work at Baltimore next spring.

—In the list of members of the Woman's Rights Congress in Paris, Julia Ward Howe appears among the W's as "Messes Warlow."

—Mr. B. P. White, of Calais, Me., one of the members of the Maine House of Representatives, I daresay for his great strength. He recently lifted a weight of 748 pounds.

—The wife of Gen. Sherman is quoted as saying that her husband first aroused her admiration at the early age of ten years "because he caught rabbits better than any of the other boys."

—It is stated that the doctor who examined Montagne's lungs a few hours before he bled to death, and pronounced them sound, sent in his bill after the actor's death for $1500.

—Blood was the name of the juror who hung the panel in the Billings murder case recently tried at Ballston, N. Y. Eleven men voted Billings innocent, but Blood hung out for guilty.

—Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, contradicts the report that he was a reformer to Ohio at the expiration of his term. He says that he is a lawyer in Mississippi, and intends to pass the rest of his days in that State.

—Sir David Wilkie's spelling was not perfect. In his letters the reader finds "shadilow," "midowness," "excellence," "excell," "Morillo" (for Murillo), "cecond," "two low," "palatse" (for palettes), etc. Some of his brother artists may reap comfort from the fact.

—While he is Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada the Marquis of Lorne will enjoy the honor of a higher rank than that of his own wife —a privilege not granted at home. Thus, in the procession at the grand opening of Albert Hall, in London, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh and the Princess Louise came next after the Queen, while the Marquis of Lorne came far behind, almost lost in a crowd of royal attendants.

—A nice point will have to be weighed at the next trial of the Rev. Mr. Hayden for the murder of Mary Stannard. Has the discovery of the arsenic in the stomach of the victim the theory of the State has been that when Hayden, as he testified, boughban ounce of arsenic with which to kill rats, he really intended it for Mary. Hayden testified that he had not used a particle of the poison and had put it away in his barn, where it has been found since. If there still remains an ounce or almost an ounce the defense will contend that none of it was used to poison Mary. On the other hand the prosecution will assert that as arsenic is sold very cheap the druggist was careless about giving exact weight and threw in considerably more than an ounce. On this delicate point the man's life may depend.

Perihelion and Pestilence.

If there is anything in "astrological criology," we are approaching one of the most postilential periods of earth's history. Since the commencement of the Christian era, the perihelia of the planets, or nearness of the solar system —Jupiter, Uranus, Saturn and Neptune—have not been coincident. But, this is about to occur, and, in the language of Dr. Knapp, who has traced the history of the greatest epidemics that ever afflicted the human race, to the perihelia of planets, there will soon be "lively times for the doctors." The theory is that when one or more of the large planets is nearest to the sun, the temperature and condition of our atmosphere are so disturbed as to cause injurious vicissitudes, terrific rains, prolonged droughts, etc., resulting in the destruction of crops, and pestilences among human beings and domestic animals.

Dr. Knapp has collected a mass of statistical data, all going to show that perihelion data have always been marked by unusual mortality, and that the greatest pestilences have invariably corresponded with the planets in perihelion at the same time. The revolution of Jupiter round the sun is accomplished in a little less that twelve years, of Saturn in a little less than thirty years, of Uranus in about eighty-four years and of Neptune in about 164 years. If it be true, therefore, that the perihelia of these planets occasion atmospheric conditions unfavorable to life, pestilential periods should occur once in a dozen years, and aggravated and still more wide-spread epidemics at longer intervals. In tracing the history of epidemics for more than two thousand years, Dr. Knapp finds the facts in all cases to validate the theory. Thus in the sixth and again in the sixteenth centuries, three of these planets were coincident in perihelion and those were the most pestilential times of the Christian era.

But soon we are to have, for the first time in 2,000 years, all four of these planets against us. They will be at their nearest approach to the sun in or soon after 1880, so that for a few years, say from 1880 to 1885, the vitality of every living thing will be put to a severe and trying ordeal. Some persons think they see, in the signs of the times, evidences of the great disasters in the immediate future. The excessive heat, the unexampled cold, the prevalence of flood and disasters at sea, the general failure of the potato crop, the widespread chill fever among human beings, and the equal prevalence of the epizootic among animals, are mentioned as among the premonitions of the rapidly approaching perihelion.

Well, "to be forewarned is to be forearmed." Accidents excepted, we know very well that the persons of more vigorous constitutions and more hyglenic habits will have the better chance to survive whatever adverse influences the extraordinary perihelia will occasion. It is well known to physicians that, in all pestilences, plague, typhus, small-pox, cholera, murrain, etc., the intemperate, the dissipated and those whose sanitary conditions were bad, furnished the victims.

We do not write to alarm anyone, nor to make a sensation. We state the facts which all history attests. Readers can judge for themselves what importance to attach to the subject. That the conjoint perihelion of all the large planets of the solar system, one of which, Jupiter, is a thousand times as large as the earth, must disturb our atmosphere and temperature very considerable, is probable; that this disturbance must be injurious to health and life, is certain, and that these periods have heretofore been pestilential, is a matter of record. How much we shall suffer during the next dozen or fifteen years, depends very much upon how nearly we live a life in accordance with the laws of life.—Science of Health.

The short Trianon suits for the street have panier draperies behind, and other new fancies, such as Marie Stuart sleeves, made very full, and instead of flounces on lower skirts, Watteau polonaise with Clarissa Harlowe scarfs, and newest of all are the coat polonaises that have also an overskirt accompanying them. Thus a black costume will have a velvet basque with Marie Stuart sleeves of satin, in which are velvet slashings from the elbow up to the armhole. The front of the skirt will be all velvet and beads, while the silk back breadths will be covered with pleated flounces alternately of silk and of satin, and a panier drapery at the top will be scarfs of vel

The ELECTIONS!

Full Returns From Everywhere!

BETTER and BETTER

A Solid North as Well as a Solid South!

The Republicans Carry Every Northern State in which an Election is Held!

The Republican party gained a victory in the late election of the 5th, of which surpass even the most sanguine expectations of its adherents. It has carried every Northern State in which an election was held, redeeming New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. It has elected Republican State Legislatures in every Northern State where legislative elections were held, ensuring Republican Senators from New Hampshire, Connecticut (a gain), New York, Pensylvania, Illinois and Wisconsin. It has not lost a single congressional district in the north, so far as at present known, while it has gained over a dozen districts. Such a triumph of Republican principles, and also of honest finance, is a glorious reward for the courage and fidelity to principle which the grand old party has exhibited throughout the campaign, in every Northern State from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

New York shows a republican majority of fifteen thousand on the popular vote, Pennsylvania is Republican by fully twenty-five thousand majority, Illinois by at least ten thousand, and Wisconsin by ten to fifteen thousand. All the other States of the North show similar Republican gains and majorities.

Not only have the Democrats been vanquished, but a party even more dangerous —if it should ever gain power— has been buried out of sight. The "National" party—the party of inflation and alternate repudiation—has so far as known, failed not only to carry any State bnut to elect a single Congressman. It has not merely been defeated, but routed and slaughtered. Its head and front, who sought by its aid to capture Massachusetts, is buried under an adverse majority of 30,000.

After the victory over Butler in Massachusetts, the redemption of Conuecticut. New Jersey and New York is the most gratifying feature of the election. In Connecticut we gain the State government and Legislature, insuring a Republican United States Senator in place of Barnum, and also gain two congressmen. Should the next presidential election go to the House of Representatives, Connecticut will be found in the column of Republican States. General Joseph R. Hawley goes back to Congress with added honors and wider experience, and will make one of its most useful of members. New York gives a Republican plurality in the popular vote, for the first time since 1872. It sends an overwhelming Republican delegation to Congress, with a gain of two or three districts. Its legislature is largely Republican, and will elect a Republican United States Senator. These victories afford good ground for exultation.

Michigan.

The return from this State show even a larger vote for honest money principles then was anticipated, and lawyer than the first reports indicated. Gov. Croswell's plurality is 40,000. The Congressional districts give Republican pluralities of from 900 to 4,500, and the legislature is about three fonrths Republican in the Senate, and nearly the same in the House. The aggregate National vote is apparently about the same as the Democratic.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Willit's plurality in the Second will be over 3,000; McGowan's in the third Third is 1,430; Borrows' in the fourth approaches 4,000; Stone's in the Fifth 500; Brower's in the Sixth 2,000; Conger's in the seventh 2,400; Horr's in the eighth 2,000.

THE NORTH DISTRICT

The returns show Mr. Hubbell elected by between 5,000 and 6,000 plurality. His plurality in the Northern Peninsula will exceed 2,000.

SENATORIAL

Mr. Bell is elected by about 3,000 majority.

REPRESENTATIVE

The returns so far print with certainty to the election of Faithorp (Dem.) as Representative by a plurality of between 50 and 100.

Saleratus is cheaper

We have met the enemy, and they are ours—horse, foot and dragoons.

For the first time in twenty years the the Republicans carried Milwaukee County Wis on the Fifth In 1873 the Democrats had a majority of 7,000 in that county.

In fifty six days more, specie payments will be an accomplished fact, greenbacks will be at par, and the howl of the inflationists will have lost all significance.

The balance of trade continues to be largely in favor of the United States Offical returns show that the balance in our favor for the month of September was over $20,500,000, an increasd of about $5,000,000 over that for the same month in 1877.

There are strong signs that the treaty of Berlin, made by the European powers at the close of the Russo-Turkish war, is but a flimsy piece of patch-work and is likely to lead to further and worse complications, and serve as the occasion or pretext for future wars, instead of guaranteeing peace. Disagreements concerning it are multiplying and it really seems as though some of them were to eventuate in fighting.

THE head of South Arm is taking a start in the way of building up, and will soon make other Pine Villages "hump" if they don't look to their laurels.

THE Ladies' Aid Society held an Oyster Social at the residence of A. Buttars this (Tuesday) evening. Supper from seven till nine.

THE Record? Why of course. With four papers in Emmet County, some of them must be one horse concerns. But there is nothing like brag and bluster. That's half.

BOYNE FALLS.—Rev. Mr. Redpathere county organized a Presbyterian Church at Boyne Falls. Last Sabbath they received eight new members by letter and confession of faith. The society now numbers fifteen members. They are agitating the question of building a Church edifice.

PERSONAL.—Orson Campbell, Sr., of Beaver Island, is in town visiting his sister, Mrs. Preston, the mother of Mrs. S. M. See, of this place, who arrived from the East this fall. Mr. Campbell had not seen his sister in over twenty years until the occasion of his present visit.

—"Tip" Miller is over here from the Beavers, feeling mighty big. He was elected sheriff over there at the late election.

ARISTOCRATIC PAUPERISM. — With a few more cases of pauperism like that of John Limburger, Charlevoix county would need to expand the dimensions of her exchequer, and make wholesale contracts for transportation. For board, medical attendance and transportation that gentleman has cost the county within a year, $287.00, and now the Board of Supervisors have left it discretionary with the Superintendents of the Poor to expend $200 more in sending him home to Sweden—probably by first class cabin passage, wines and fruit included. This will foot up $567.10 for Mr. Limburger. How is that for high? Who wouldn't have a sore leg?

GRAIN.—The large amount of wheat purchased and shipped by our merchants this fall, is evidence enough that Charlevoix must soon have a flouring-mill. We already have two grist-mills closely contiguous to Charlevoix, but the business of those mills would in no wise be diminished by another, which could flour this large amount of surplus grain that now goes to the Chicago and Milwaukee markets.

CROSE & DORMAN are getting their new building to fine shape. The painter and graining are at work beautifying the interior. They will get their goods in next week, when they will appear with an advertisement in this paper

THE entire crowd at Pos, Buse & Buttars' are on the jump from morning to till night opening boxes, and shelving new goods. They have, as usual, remanded the wants of this community, and they offer extraordinary inducements to the trading public.

THERE is no better way of plastering the contrast between the Charlevoix of nine years ago and that of to-day than by gazing southward from the bridge for a moment, over our beautiful village and its thrifty places of business, and then, turning upon your heel and gazing upon the "old store," which stands untenanted, solitary and alone. Less than a decade ago this was the only mercantile establishment in Charlevoix. Ten years years hence a greater contrast can be pictured.

IF is our say now. Whenever the editor of the Petoskey Record finds an opportunity to throw a slur on a sheet at Charlevoix, he considers it a part of his journalistic duty so to do. His last week's issue contains a statement concerning Charlevoix which misrepresents the facts in some particulars, and is totally false in others. Now, Mr. Record, turn the channel of your excessive smartness homeward, and use it in the interest of your ephemeral city. Don't waste so much precious wind in trying to belittle your betters.

MONEY TO LOAN on good real estate security, by A. A. Bleazby, Attorney at Law, Kalkaska, Mich. 16-1yr

HON P. R. L. Pierce, Postmaster of Grand Rapids, died in that city on Tuesday last. His death is a serious loss to Grand Rapids and to Michigan.

NEW BUILDING.—The large building commenced some time ago by O. D Mason, on the south side of the harbor, is enclosed. It is a very strong and substantial building, and was originally designed for a planing-mill and machine shop. Mr. Mason now has under serious consideration the project of making a flouring mill of it. The building is admirably adapted to this purpose, and is favourably located. We hope he will carry these plans into execution.

THE HARBOR.—The engineer department have asked for $30,000 for Charlevoix harbor for next season's expenditure. Even if cut down to the same figures as last year, with what has been left from last year's appropriation, we shall have $15,000. Col. Mansfield proposes to expend the most of this amount in dredging, which, with the completed piers, will give us a fine harbor of probably a uniform depth of twelve feet. The importance of Charlevoix as a port, and the Pine lake region as a trading section, will take agiant stride forward.

MARINE.—The scow Forest is in port.

—The Fountain City was here Thursday morning, bound down. She will make one more round trip this fall.

—The steamer Gazelle is still running and will continue to as long as there is any business.

—The steamer Clara Belle was here Saturday with about twenty tons of freight for Charlevoix.

—Capt. Dan Way has traded back the small schooner Flora, for a half interest in the schooner W. A. Smith.

—A. Fox & Co. talk of putting a new "fan-tail" on the tug Com. Nutt, and otherwise improving her this winter.

—Mr. Bartholomew is having a large shed built over the steamer Nellie Brothe, and work will be prosecuted on her nearly all winter. She will be enclosed.

Of the 285 members elected in the House of Representatives there are 149 Democrats, 132 Republicans, Greenbackers. The Democratic majority is reduced to the nucleus of a small number of 9 over all.

The ELECTIONS!

Full Returns From Everywhere!

BETTER and BETTER

A Solid North as Well as a Solid South!

The Republicans Carry Every Northern State in which an Election is Held!

The Republican party gained a victory in the late election of the 5th, of which surpass even the most sanguine expectations of its adherents. It has carried every Northern State in which an election was held, redeeming New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. It has elected Republican State Legislatures in every Northern State where legislative elections were held, ensuring Republican Senators from New Hampshire, Connecticut (a gain), New York, Pensylvania, Illinois and Wisconsin. It has not lost a single congressional district in the north, so far as at present known, while it has gained over a dozen districts. Such a triumph of Republican principle, and use of honest finance, as a glorious reward for the courage and fidelity to principle which the grand old party has exhibited throughout the campaign, in every Northern State from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

New York shows a republican majority of fifteen thousand on the popular vote, Pennsylvania is Republican by fully twenty-five thousand majority, Illinois by at least ten thousand, and Wisconsin by ten to fifteen thousand. All the other States of the North show similar Republican gains and majorities.

Not only have the Democrats been vanquished, but a party even more dangerous—if it should ever gain power—has been buried out of sight. The "National" party—the party of inflation and alternate repudiation—has so far as known, failed not only to carry any State but to elect a single Congressman. It has not merely been defeated, but routed and slaughtered. Its head and front, who sought by its aid to capture Massachusetts, is buried under an adverse majority of 30,000.

After the victory over Butler in Massachusetts, the redemption of Connecticut, New Jersey and New York is the most gratifying feature of the election. In Connecticut we gain the State government and Legislature, insuring a Republican United States Senator in place of Barnum, and also gain two congressmen. Should the next presidential election go to the House of Representatives, Connecticut will be found in the column of Republican States. General Joseph R Hawley goes back to Congress with added honors and wider experience, and will make one of its most useful of members. New York gives a Republican plurality in the popular vote, for the first time since 1872. It sends an overwhelming Republican delegation to Congress, with a gain of two or three districts. Its legislature is largely Republican, and will elect a Republican United States Senator. These victories afford good ground for exultation.

Michigan,

The return from this State show even a larger vote for honest money principles then was anticipated, and larger than the first reports indicated. Gov. Croswell's plurality is 40,000. The Congressional districts give Republican pluralities of from 900 to 4,500, and the legislature is about three fourths Republican in the Senate, and nearly the same in the House. The aggregate National vote is apparently about the same as the Democratic.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Willits's plurality in the Second will be over 3,000; McGowan's in the third Third is 1,430; Burrows' in the fourth approaches 4,000; Stone's in the Fifth 900; Brown's in the Sixth 2,000; Conger's in the seventh 2,460; Horr's in the eighth 2,000.

The Detroit Free Press says Mr. Bell's majority will be between 7,000 and 8,000. His plurality in the Detroit District is will exceed 1,200.

SECRETARIAL.

Mr. Bell is elected by about 1,000 majority.

REPRESENTATIVE.

The returns so far point with certainty to the election of Dallinger (Rep.) as Representative by a plurality of between 500 and 1,000.

Salvation Oil.

We have not one enemy, and that one stranger, and all druggists.

For the first time in twenty years the Republicans elected Milwaukee County Ticket. In 1873 the Democrats had a majority of 7,000 in that county.

In fifty six days more, specie payments will be an accomplished fact, greenbacks will be at par, and the bond of the infidels will have lost all significance.

The balance of trade continues to be largely in favor of the United States. Official returns show that the balance in our favor for the month of September was over $23,500,000, an overcard of about $5,000,000 over that for the same month in 1877.

There are strong signs that the treaty of Berlin, made by the European powers at the close of the Russo-Turkish war, is but a flimsy piece of patchwork and is likely to lead to further and worse complications, and serve as the occasion or pretext for future wars, instead of guaranteeing peace. Disagreements concerning it are multiplying and it really seems at though some of them were to culminate in fighting.

Boardman River Flour

Made of GRAND TRAVERSE WHEAT ENTIRELY, proves itself to be MOST DESIRABLE in its component parts and qualities, and especially adapted to the requirements of the

FAMILY, BAKER AND HOTEL

Its reputation is now so well established that those once using it INSIST upon having it ONLY.

THE GRAND TRAVERSE

Also made by ourselves is made of the choicest white winter wheat, and nothing else, and speaks for itself when introduced. All the principal dealers in Charlevoix will have both kinds in stock. Remember the quality is always uniform, and price as low as poorer grades made from spring wheat flour.

OUR BOARDMAN RIVER

Is made from winter, spring and patent flour, judiciously combined.

THE head of South Arm is taking a start in the way of building up, and will soon make other Pine Villages "hump" if they don't look to their laurels.

THE Ladies' Aid Society held an Oyster Social at the residence of A Buttars this (Tuesday) evening. Supper from seven till nine.

THE Record? Why of course. With four papers in Emmet County, some of them must be one horse concerns. But there is nothing like brag and bluster. That's half.

BOYNE FALLS.—Rev. Mr. Redpathcounty organized a Presbyterian Church at Boyne Falls Last Sabbath they received eight new members by letter and confession of faith. The society now numbers fifteen members. They are agitating the question of building a Church edifice.

PERSONAL.—Orson Campbell, Sr., of Beaver Island, is in town visiting his sister, Mrs. Preston, the mother of Mrs. S. M. See, of this place, who arrived from the East this fall. Mr. Campbell had not seen his sister in over twenty years until the occasion of his present visit.

—"Tip" Miller is over here from the Beavers, feeling mighty big. He was elected sheriff over there at the late election.

ARISTOCRATIC PAUPERISM.—With a few more cases of pauperism like that of John Lumburger, Charlevoix county would need to expand the dimensions of her exchequer, and make wholesale contracts for transportation. For board, medical attendance and transportation that gentleman has cost the county within a year, $297.00, and now the Board of Supervisors have left it discretionary with the Superintendents of the Poor to expend $280 more in sending him home to Sweden—probably by first-class cabin passage, wines and fruit included. This will foot up $567.10 for Mr. Limburger. How is that for high? Who wouldn't have a sore leg?

GRAIN.—The large amount of wheat purchased and shipped by our merchants this fall, is evidence enough that Charlevoix must soon have a flouring-mill. We already have two steam mills closely contiguous to Charlevoix, but the business of these mills would in no wise be diminished by another, which could flour this large amount of surplus grain that now goes to the Chicago and Milwaukee markets.

Crozier & Herman are getting their new building in fine shape. The painting and graining are at work beautifying its interior. They will put their goods in next week, when they will appear with an advertisement in this paper.

THE entire crowd at Fox, Rose & Butters' site on the jump from morning on till night opening boxes and shelving new goods. They have, as usual, consulted the wants of this community, and they offer extraordinary inducements to the trading public.

THERE is no better way of picturing the contrast between the Charlevoix of nine years ago and that of to-day than by gazing southward from the bridge for a moment, over our beautiful village and its thrifty places of business, and then, turning upon your heel and gazing upon the "old store," which stands untenanted, solitary and alone. Less than a decade ago this was the only mercantile establishment in Charlevoix. Ten years years hence a greater contrast can be portrayed.

IT is our say now. Whenever the editor of the Petoskey Record finds an opportunity to throw a slur or a sneer at Charlevoix, he considers it a part of his journalistic duty so to do. His last week's issue contains a statement concerning Charlevoix which misrepresents the facts in some particulars, and is totally false in others. Now, Mr. Record, turn the channel of your excessive smartness homeward, and use it in the interest of your ephemeral city. Don't waste so much precious wind in trying to belittle your betters.

MONEY TO LOAN, on good real estate security, by A. A. Blenzley, Attorney at Law, Kalkaska, Mich 16 1yr

HON P. R. L. Beecr, Postmaster of Grand Rapids, died in that city on Tuesday last. His death is a serious loss to Grand Rapids and to Michigan.

NEW BUILDING.—The large building commenced some time ago by O. D Mason, on the south side of the harbor, is enclosed. It is a very strong and substantial building, and was originally designed for a planing-mill and machine shop. Mr. Mason now has under serious consideration the project of making a flouring mill of it. The building is admirably adapted to this purpose, and is favourably located. We hope he will carry these plans into execution.

THE HARBOR.—The engineer department have asked for $80,000 for Charlevoix harbor for next season's expenditure. Even if cut down to the same figure as last year, with what has been left from last year's appropriation, we shall have $15,000. Col. Mansfield proposes to expend the most of this amount in dredging, which, with the completed piers, will give us a fine harbor of probably a uniform depth of twelve feet. The importance of Charlevoix as a port, and the Pine lake region as a trading section, will take against stride forward.

MARINE.—The scow Forest is in port.

—The Fountain City was here Thursday morning bound down. She will make one more round trip this fall.

—The steamer Gazelle is still running, and will continue to as long as there is any business.

—The steamer Clara Belle was here Saturday with about twenty tons of freight for Charlevoix.

—Capt. Dan Way has traded back the small schooner Flora, for a half interest in the schooner W. A. Smith.

—A. Fox & Co. talk of putting a new "fan-tail" on the tug Com. Nott, and otherwise improving her this winter.

—Mr. Bartholomew is having a large shed built over the steamer Nellie Brothe, and work will be prosecuted on her nearly all winter. She will be enclosed.

Of the 283 members elected to the House of Representatives there are 149 Democrats, 132 Republicans, Greenbackers. The Democratic ty is reduced to the uncomfortable small number of 9 over all.

The ELECTIONS!

Full Returns From Everywhere!

BETTER and BETTER

A Solid North as Well as a Solid South!

The Republicans Carry Every Northern State in which an Election is Held!

The Republican party gained a victory in the late election of the 5th, of which surpass even the most sanguine expectations of its adherents. It has carried every Northern State in which an election was held, redeeming New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. It has elected Republican State Legislatures in every Northern State where legislative elections were held, ensuring Republican Senators from New Hampshire, Connecticut (a gain), New York, Pensylvania, Illinois and Wisconsin. It has not lost a single congressional district in the north, so far as at present known, while it has gained over a dozen districts. Such a triumph of Republican principles, and also of honest finance, is a glorious reward for the courage and fidelity to principle which the grand old party has exhibited throughout the campaign, in every Northern State from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

New York shows a republican majority of fifteen thousand on the popular vote, Pennsylvania is Republican by fully twenty-five thousand majority, Illinois by at least ten thousand, and Wisconsin by ten to fifteen thousand. All the other States of the North show similar Republican gains and majorities.

Not only have the Democrats been vanquished, but a party even more dangerous—if it should ever gain power—has been buried out of sight. The "National" party—the party of inflation and alternate repudiation—has so far as known, failed not only to carry any State buut to elect a single Congressman. It has not merely been defeated, but routed and slaughtered. Its head and front, who sought by its aid to capture Massachusetts, is buried under an adverse majority of 30,000.

After the victory over Butler in Massachusetts, the redemption of Connecticut, New Jersey and New York is the most gratifying feature of the election. In Connecticut we gain the State government and Legislature, insuring a Republican United States Senator in place of Ingersoll, and also gain two congressmen. Should the next presidential election go to the House of Representatives, Connecticut will be found in the column of Republican States. General Joseph R. Hawley goes back to Congress with added honors and wider experience, and will make one of its most useful of members. New York gives a Republican pluraility in the popular vote, for the first time since 1872. It sends an overwhelming Republican delegation to Congress, with a gain of two or three districts. Its legislature is largely Republican, and will elect a Republican United States Senator. These victories afford good ground for exultation.

Michigan,

The return from this State show even a larger vote for honest money principles then was anticipated, and larger than the first reports indicated. Gov. Croswell's plurality is 40,000. The Congressional districts give Republican pluralities of from 900 to 4,500, and the legislature is about three-fourths Republican in the Senate, and nearly the same in the House. The aggregate National vote is apparently about the same as the Democratic.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Willis's plurality in the Second will be over 3,000; McGowan's in the third Third is 1,480; Burrows' in the fourth approaches 4,000; Stone's in the Fifth 900; Brewer's in the Sixth 2,000; Conger's in the seventh 2,400; Horr's in the eighth 2,000.

THE STATE OFFICE.

The returns show Mr. Bell's election by between 5400 and 6000 plurality. His plurality in the Northern Peninsula will exceed 2,000.

PENNYROYAL.

Mr. Bell is elected by about 3,000 majority.

REPRESENTATIVE.

The returns so far point with certainty to the election of Pailthorp (Dem.) as Representative by a plurality of between 50 and 100.

Saltzman is elected.

We have met the enemy, and they are ours—horse, foot and dragoons.

For the first time in twenty years the the Republicans carried Milwaukee County, Wis. on the Fifth. In 1873 the Democrats had a majority of 7,500 in that county.

In fifty six days more, specie payments will be an accomplished fact, greenbacks will be at par, and the howl of the inflationists will have lost all significance.

The balance of trade continues to be largely in favor of the United States. Offical returns shew that the balance in our favor for the month of September was over $20,500,000, an increasd of about $3,000,000 over that for the same month in 1877.

There are strong signs that the treaty of Berlin, made by the European powers at the close of the Russo-Turkish war, is but a flimsy piece of patch-work and is likely to lead to further and worse complications, and serve as the occasion or pretext for future wars, instead of guaranteeing peace. Disagreements concerning it are multiplying and it really seems as though some of them were to eventuate in fighting.

THE Ladies' Aid Society hold an Oyster Social at the residence of A. Buttars this (Tuesday) evening. Supper from seven till nine.

The Record Why of course. With four papers in Emmet County, some of them it will be one horse concern. But there is nothing like brag and bluster. That's half.

BOYNE FALLS.—Rev. Mr. Redpathre cently organized a Presbyterian Church at Boyne Falls. Last Sabbath they received eight new members by letter and confession of faith. The society now numbers fifteen members. They are agitating the question of building a Church edifice.

PERSONAL.—Orson Campbell, Sr., of Beaver Island, is in town visiting his sister, Mrs. Preston, the mother of Mrs. S. M. See, of this place, who arrived from the East this fall. Mr. Campbell had not seen his sister in over twenty years until the occasion of his present visit.

—"Tip" Miller is over here from the Beavers, feeling mighty big. He was elected sheriff over there at the late election.

ARISTOCRATIC PAUPERISM.—With a few more cases of pauperism like that of John Limburger, Charlevoix county would need to expand the dimensions of her exchequer, and make wholesale contracts for transportation. For board, medical attendance and transportation that gentleman has cost the county within a year, $287.00, and now the Board of Supervisors have left it discretionary with the Superintendents of the Poor to expend $200 more in sending him home to Sweden—probably by first-class cabin passage, wines and fruit included. This will foot up $567.10 for Mr. Limburger. How is that for high? Who wouldn't have a sore leg?

GRAIN.—The large amount of wheat purchased and shipped by our merchants this fall, is evidence enough that Charlevoix must soon have a flouring mill. We already have two grist-mills closely contiguous to Charlevoix, but the business of these mills would in no wise be diminished by another, which could flour this large amount of surplus grain that now goes to the Chicago and Milwaukee markets.

Crane & Dorman are getting their new building to the slope. The painter and graines are at work beautifying the interior. They will put their goods in next week, when they will appear with an advertisement in this paper.

THE entire crowd at Fox, Hose & Buttars' are on the jump from morning until night opening boxes, and shelving new goods. They have, as usual, examined the wants of this community and they offer extraordinary inducements to the trading public.

THERE is no better way of picturing the contrast between the Charlevoix of nine years ago and that of to-day than by gazing southward from the bridge for a moment, over our beautiful village and bay to the picturesque and blufferby places of loneliness, and then, turning upon your heel and gazing upon the "old store," which stands unteranted, solitary and alone. Less than a decade ago this was the only mercantile establishment in Charlevoix. Ten years years hence a greater contrast can be pictured.

BY is our say now. Whenever the editor of the Petoskey Record finds an opportunity to throw a slur or a sneer at Charlevoix, he considers it a part of his journalistic duty so to do. His last week's issue contains a statement concerning Charlevoix which misrepresents the facts in some particulars, and is totally false in others. Now, Mr. Record, turn the channel of your excessive smartness homeward, and use it in the interest of your ephemeral city. Don't waste so much precious wind in trying to belittle your betters.

MONEY TO LOAN on good real estate security, by A. A. Bleazby, Attorney at Law, Kalkaska, Mich. 16-1yr

HON. P. H. P. Pierce, Postmaster of Grand Rapids, died in that city on Tuesday last. His death is a serious loss to Grand Rapids and to Michigan.

NEW BUILDING.—The large building commenced some time ago by O. D Mason, on the south side of the harbor, is enclosed. It is a very strong and substantial building, and was originally designed for a planing-mill and machine shop. Mr. Mason now has under serious consideration the project of making a flouring mill of it. The building is admirably adapted to this purpose, and is favourably located. We hope he will carry these plans into execution.

THE HARBOR.—The engineer department have asked for $30,000 for Charlevoix harbor for next season's expenditure. Even if cut down to the same figures as last year, with what has been left from last year's appropriation, we shall have $15,000. Col. Mansfield proposes to expend the most of this amount in dredging, which, with the completed piers, will give us a fine harbor of probably a uniform depth of twelve feet. The importance of Charlevoix as a port, and the Pine lake region as a trading section, will take agiant stride forward.

MARINE.—The scow Forest is in port.

—The Fountain City was here Thursday morning, bound down. She will make one more round trip this fall.

—The steamer Gazelle is still running and will continue to as long as there is any business.

—The steamer Clara Belle was here Saturday with about twenty tons of freight for Charlevoix.

—Capt. Dan Way has traded back the small schooner Flora, for a half interest in the schooner W. A. Smith.

—A. Fox & Co. talk of putting a new "fan-tail" on the tug Com. Nutt, and otherwise improving her this winter.

—Mr. Bartholomew is having a large shed built over the steamer Nellie Bloede, that will be prosecuted on her nearly all winter. She will be enclosed.

Of the 289 members elected in the House of Representatives there are 149 Democrats, 132 Republicans, and 8 Greenbackers. The Democratic majority is reduced to the uncomfortably small number of 9 over all.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—At Pulaski, N. Y., on a recent Saturday night, the floor of a stable fell and left five fine cows hanging by the neck. When found on Sunday morning they were all dead.

—The intelligent Mr. James Wilson, of Bruce, Ontario, went to shoot crows and placed his left hand over the muzzle of his gun so as "to keep the crows from smelling the powder" till the last moment. He has more sense now, but less hands.

—At Boylestown, Pa., a few days ago, as four men were about going down into an iron mine to work, a piston-wheel by which the cage was lowered broke and precipitated four persons to the bottom of the shaft, a distance of 350 feet. Three were almost instantly killed and one fatally injured.

—Judge Pierce, while angling at Swan Lake, Daviess County, Ind., the other day, got out of live bait. He saw a large water-snake about 100 yards away spring from a log, seize a minnow and crawl back on the log. The Judge immediately picked up the rifle and put a ball through the snake's head, got the minnow and caught a four pound pike with it. The Judge tells this story himself.

—Probably no men ever stood closer against each other than did the four miners who, one day in the shaft of a Nevada mine, heard the hoisting-car break from its fastenings far above their heads. They knew that there would be just a foot of space between the falling car and the wall; but they were not sure about their own thickness, and there was no time for calculation. They made themselves as flat as possible, and escaped injury, although the shirt of one was torn off.

—A resident of Jamalca, L. I., did a shrewd thing, the other day. While out gunning he shot a quail, in violation of the Game law, and some of his neighbors, who saw the act performed, prepared to lodge information against him. He anticipated them, however, by going to a Magistrate and entering a complaint against himself, was fined ten dollars, which he paid, and then claimed half the fine, which is by law given to informers, received the five dollars and went his way rejoicing.

—A noise in Mr. Lake's house in San Jose, Cal., led him and his dog to believe that a burglar was at work, and they started in different directions to investigate. It was in the night, and, when the man and the beast came together in a hallway, each took the other for the intruder. The dog sprang from under a table, intending to seize Mr. Lake, who, believing that he was attacked by a robber, hastily fired several shots. A light was brought, and the wounded dog, recognizing his master, crawled to his feet and died.

—One day last week, while Mr. Boone and Mr. Kim Thomas were out in the woods near Plattsburg, Mo., engaged in chopping, Mr. Boone saw a large black snake run into a hollow log. He told Mr. Thomas about it, and the latter went to the end of the log to take a peep at the serpent. Just about this time the reptile dashed out, and, before Mr. Thomas could move, was securely coiled around his neck, with his head in front of his, licking out its tongue directly against his. Although nearly choked, he seized it near the head, and, with the aid of Mr. Boone, who had gathered enough courage to take hold of the tail, the business of unwinding was successfully performed. The snake was about six feet long.—St. Louis Republican.

—Fifteen years ago this month Horace R. Strong was shot in the right hip while serving in the Union army. The wound was not long in healing and the ball did not cause him much pain or trouble, but the missile was never recovered. In fact, no effort to recover it was made. Last Sunday Mr. Strong was walking on Prospect street, when he felt a sharp pain in his hip, and upon going home discovered a large red spot just above his knee, to which sharp shocks of pain were sent from his hip. Feeling of the red spot, he discovered a hard lump under the skin and wondered at it. All day Monday and Tuesday the spot increased in size, until Strong decided to lance the sore. Doing so with an ordinary pocket-knife, he was surprised when the blade of the knife had struck a hard substance, and, with a cracking noise like the opening of a pea-pod, the leaden bullet which was sent into his hip fifteen years ago forced itself through the incision and fell upon the floor. The wound has entirely healed and Mr. Strong is keeping the bullet to show to his grandchildren.—Detroit Free Press.

Respect for Age in France.

There is something very touching in the respectful affection and care with which old age was (and is still) treated in France. Not only the parents, but the grandmother's sabots is the point of reunion of the whole family, vying with each other who should best please and amuse the old lady. They never failed, whatever their evening occupation or amusement, to come in first and delight Jeune Maman and Mr Tante by their pretty toilets, and be rewarded by the somewhat exaggerated admiration they elicited. But the old lady really thought her granddaughters marvels of beauty and grace. A very wicked feature in French old age is its bienveillance to the young, an impossible word to translate, for it is neither good nature, kindness, nor indulgence—rather an habitual state of mind disposed to admire and approve. This tone of feeling, natural for children in their young to the old are almost universally dutiful and affectionate. Well do I remember how pretty I used to think the slight inclination and kiss of the hand held out to them, which professed the morning embrace to Bonne Maman. Our own royal family is the only one in England where I have seen this graceful custom prevail. If young women and girls knew how much charm and coquetterie there is in this manner in their elders; how much younger they seem, how their grace and softness gains by contrast with old age, they would not in their own interests indulge in the tiresome, out-of-the-way-old-Dan-Tucker style which obtains so much in our society at present. Even the young men were full of little attentions to their aged relatives. They really loved them almost as parents. When the "Prince Consort's Life" first appeared we all wondered at the deep grief he expressed for the death of his grandmother, a relationship scarcely taken so seriously with us. Adorable et adoree was the phrase used to me only a few months ago by a young Frenchman of that most modern of about the venerable mother of his parents. It must be said that the grandchildren were often brought up in her house, and that she, being much younger than the same relation in England, became almost a friend and confidant to these young men, who found it better that experience in the past and sympathy in the present which made her society as charming to them as it was to those of her own age. Not having in these days the resource of clubs, the young men came in with the news of the day to pass the time till the hour for the balls, thus bringing into these salons an infusion of youth, which obviated dullness.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A Man From Alaska.

A Journal reporter yesterday interviewed Mr. John M. Morton, who has recently returned to the city after a lengthened absence in Alaska, where he has been occupied in his official duties under the United States Government.

Mr. Morton has spent eight years in the Territory of Alaska, and has had better opportunities of becoming acquainted with that almost unknown region than most men who have sought to learn its resources and future possibilities. He has been officially connected with the Islands of St. Paul and St. George—two of the Aleutian group —and his duties, in conjunction with three assistants, were to act in behalf of the Government in enforcing the terms of the lease under which these islands are held for twenty years by the Alaska Commercial Company. In regard to these islands, the inhabitants are and their principal occupation, Mr. Morton says:

The population of the Island of St. Paul is about 240 natives, and that of St. George 100. There are not more than 1,300 people upon the Aleutian group, and those who live upon the two islands named are unquestionably much better off and in a higher condition of civilization than any of their neighbors. There has been a marked improvement in their condition during the last seven years. When the contract of the United States Government came into existence, these people lived in mud tents, partly dug out, and so low that they were obliged to crawl in and out, while these miserable dwellings had no ventilation whatever. Under the conditions of the lease, the company is compelled to do certain things for the inhabitants of the island; but they have done more than was required of them. All the men are employed in the seal fishering, which occupy less than two months in the year. They drive the seals in shore, kill and skin them, and salt and otherwise prepare the skins for shipment to San Francisco. For this work, which rarely lasts more than about six weeks, each man receives $400 or $500, and all the rest of the year they have nothing in the world to do. The company are also compelled to furnish the people with fuel, salt fish for the winter and sufficient salt in barrels with which they may preserve the flesh of the seal for winter consumption, this being their principal article of diet. All the money the people have to spend is in the purchase of bread and such other things as they may desire to get from the company's store.

They need not spend much for dress, as they can obtain plenty of sealskin clothing; but as a matter of fact some of them do buy very fine clothes, and dress in quite stylish fashions. It rests with the people themselves whether they will save money or waste it on finery and trinkets. The company's store keep a good assortment, and they have plenty of opportunity to spend money there if they are so inclined. But many of them are getting quite rich. Some of them I know have as much as $3,000 in the savings bank at San Francisco; and there are no class of laborers getting more money with less work than those natives engaged in the seal fishery. The company provides a school eight months in the year, and has built each family a comfortable frame house, thus bettering their condition to a very great extent. Last year a church was erected at a cost of $16,000, for which the people contributed out of their earnings and have paid off the whole amount. They are devout members of the Greek Church, and attend to their religious duties with great regularity.

One stipulation of the lease is that not more than 100,000 seals shall be killed in any year, and as the lease extends over twenty years, and the company expects to renew it at the end of that term, it is as much to their interest as that of the Government to observe this condition. This present year the full number has been killed, but in 1876 and 1877 only 75,000 seals were caught each year, the reason being that the price of seal skins had become somewhat reduced. This year both the demand and the price improved. There is no danger of killing off the seals under the system at present adopted, as care is taken not to catch only the young males from two to four years of age. They never kill a female seal, nor yet an old male, and as there are several million seals around these two islands —more than all other parts of the world combined—the reproduction is more than enough to perpetuate the stock.

The company pays to the Government yearly about $820,000, and this amount may be said to represent about all that Alaska contributes to the United States. The rest of the country, which is of vast extent, covering 600,000 square miles, is practically unproductive, but in time the spruce, pine and yellow cedar timber upon the mainland will become valuable, and it is probable that extensive mineral resources will be developed; their existence in some localities is already known. The temperature on the islands where I reside is not of such extreme cold as in other parts of Alaska. Last winter was the coldest I have known, and the thermometer was never more than 22 deg. below zero. Strong winds and frequent storms prevail, however, ten months out of the twelve, and this makes the weather much colder than would otherwise be the case. The two months of summer, June and July, are usually wet, but that is the only time in the year when there are no wind-storms. There is but little moving about in the long winter, and the half-dozen white people on the islands rely upon a good library and such indoor amusements as they can follow to occupy their time.—Indianapolis Journal.

The Structure of a Horse.

His nature is eminently courageous, without ferocity, generous, docile, intelligent and, if allowed to be so, almost as affectionate as the dog. In his structure the ruling characteristic may be said in one word to consist in solidity—all the leading bones in his frame are set obliquely, or nearly so, and not at right angles. His head is set on with a subtle curve of the last few vertebrae, or backbone; which end, in their turn, with another curve, forming the tail. His shoulder-blade, being more than those of other quadrupeds, the scapula, or shoulder-blade, being oblique to the humerus, which in turn is oblique to the radius or upper part of the foreleg. So, again in the hindquarters, the haunch is set obliquely to the thigh, the thigh to the hind leg, or the upper bone of the hind leg, which at the hock makes another angle. The fore and hind-quarters form so large a portion of the entire length that a horse, although a lengthy animal from the front of his chest to the back of the haunch, is among us, by very short in the actual back or saddle-place. Then his hocks are full and large, and his pastern joints are rather long, and again are set at an angle, succeeded by a slightly different angle in the firm but expanding hoof, thus completing the bow-like arrangement which preserves the limbs from jar, and insures elasticity in every part of an animal destined to carry weight and to undergo rapid and continued exertion —a combination not existing in any other quadruped to anything like the same degree, and fitting him precisely for the purposes for which he was given to man. At present we have said nothing about his head, every part of which is equally characteristic. His well-shaped, delicate ears, are capable of being moved separately in every direction, and every movement is full of meaning and in sympathy with the eye. The eye is prominent, full and large, and placed laterally, so that he can see behind him without turning his head, his keels being his principal weapon of defence; his nostrils are large, open and flexible, and his lips fleshy, though thin and exquisitely mobile and sensitive. The large, open mouth is essential to him, as a horse breathes solely and entirely through it, being physically incapable of breathing through his mouth, as a valve in the throat actually precludes him from so doing; hence the death of a horse without a bridle in it, is open for purposes of eating or biting, but never from excitement or exhaustion, like that of most other quadrupeds, except the other species. The lips are, perhaps, even more characteristic; they are his hands as well as part of his mouth, and the horse and others of his family alone use them in this way. The ox, the sheep, the goat, the deer, the giraffe above all, and, in fact, we believe all graminivorous animals except the horse, either bite their food directly with the teeth, or grass and gather it with the tongue, which is prehensile, and gifted with more or less power of prolongation; but the horse's tongue has no such function, and, therefore, no such powers, as these services are all performed in his case by the lips; and no horseman who has let a favorite horse pick up small articles of food from the palm of his hand, can have failed to be struck with the extreme mobility, and also the sensibility and delicacy of touch, with which the lips are endowed. —The Magazine of Art.

THE Comtesse de Bassanville, editor of the Almanach du Savoir Vivre, tells ladies how to avoid "crows'-feet" around the eyes. The recipe is simple —to close the eyes for at least ten minutes every five or six hours, and thus rest the muscles of the face.

Children's Fashions.

Plaid stockings will be much worn by children this winter; the real Scotch stockings from the plaids in diamond-shape designs.

Children's furs this year consist of white round boas and muffs, generally of chinchilla, which is the most fashionable; dark squirrel is also used.

Dark brown cashmere will be much used for coats for little children of two and three years old: these are made with a deep cape, edged with folds of satin stitched on.

Girls of seven or nine years of age wear dresses made with the skirt published with a plaiting and a bias band, and a plaited waist belted in and published with a triple collar.

Knitted goods are very pretty this year. The woolen sacques for little children from one to four years old come in dark colors, with the borders shaded; dark taffy-brown, with border shaded from light ecru to sienna brown, is very pretty, as is also ruby red shaded to brown.

Misses wear plaid suits made with the scarf, which crosses in front and is draped on the right shoulder, the ends hanging loose over the back. The dress and scarf are made in the bias of the plaid. For house dresses plain material, such as cashmere and merino, is made with plaited waist cut with open square, and a chemisette or rows of lace worn inside.

Some of the prettiest little coats seen this year for little boys or girls are of brown velvet cloth, with soft fleecy lining; these have a wide plastron piece of brown velvet down the front, which at the waist forms a loop shaped like a muff. The pockets, cuffs and collar are of brown velvet. Light mousse cloth is made in the same way.

When girls until they are six years old can wear most of the pretty little suits which are made with kilted shirts or in blouse shapes for boys. In the tartan goods now used the shirts are made like little Highlander kilts, and little, double-breasted jackets, with two rows of fancy-shaped buttons in dark polished horn. On the front part of the dress two full rosettes are set near the edge.

Dressy little coats of white matelasse are made with couchmen's capes; the edges of the capes and the edges of the coat are finished with a ruffle of Alencon lace, set under a scalle cord of silver. Knots of satin ribbon are put on the pockets and up the back. With these coats little bonnets are worn to match, with soft red Gia Stuart fronts; a little bunch of roseleads and some forget-me-nots are set in fancy fantastic fashion.

There are numberless styles of hats worn, this year, by little children, as in the girls' and boys wear the same style until a certain age. The "sapi," the French soldier's fatigue hat, is worn a great deal, and a wide-brimmed, soft-crowned hat, which is set on the back of the head. This is finished with a large, soft pompon set in the middle of the crown. Little boys wear "middy" caps made of cloth, with the peak edged with a twist of gold cord.

"Pierrot" hats for little girls have high, pointed crowns—the crown in a light shade of felt, and the brims, which turn down, of a darker shade; they are trimmed with maroon ribbon bands and long ends. Fleshy hats, with high crowns and slightly-rolled brims are sometimes varied by having the brim of one color and the crown of a flat silver ornament, which holds a tall wing or aigrette in place. Older girls wear "toques" or turbans of velvet, with soft crowns.

For evening dresses or dancing-school dresses several pretty styles have been published. There is a princesse shape of pink or blue striped silk made up with satin; one of pink edged with fine plaitings of satin, the front of the dress laid away to show a long vest front of pink satin in fine shirrings, and over this the lace in fine duchesse blonde, and a soft shirred gray silk princesse with plaitings and ruches lined with cardinal satin, having a closely-shirred vest of satin.

Many new and fanciful designs are added this year to ordinary styles for boys' wear. From two and a half years up there are kilted dresses of dark blue Middlesex flannel, with rescue and collar in the Continental style, of light, fawn-colored gray; these are called the "Washington." Another style, in the same flannel, has a long, plaited blouse with sailor-collar and belt of gray; this is the "Lafayette." Both of these styles can be worn by little girls.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Beet Sugar.

THE following paper, by George May Powell, on beet sugar, was read at a recent meeting of the Agricultural Section of the American Institute, New York City:

"Divide and Conquer" is a favorite maxim in industry and in political contests. The beet sugar industry has been unknown about with misleading statements of ponderous grand totals of expense necessary to carry it on. The heavy capitals of the Old World were known to be competent to cope with these conditions. Our own people, however, have shrunk from incurring the heavy total expense of the whole industry at every point where its establishment is found it not complete, would be desirable. From $50,000 to $250,000 have been supposed to be required to begin even at any locality where people might wish to establish beet-sugar making. It is not however necessary that sufficient capital should be massed together to cover the expense or both the agricultural and the manufacturing departments of the industry. It is susceptible of a division which will suit the circumstances of our country at an early day, much more practicable than would be possible without such division. As beet sugar is chemically identical with cane sugar, the refineries at all our great commercial centers for the latter, are equally good for the former. Refineries are the major part of the manufactures element involved. Their cost is already to a great extent provided for as above suggested. Statements recently printed in the newspapers that the simple machineries needed to make apple-cider, and to boil down maple-sap, are sufficient to make crude sugar from fresh beets, to send to refineries, may be received with some question. We are specifically advised, by experienced beet-sugar makers, that these operations are too imperfect to be profitable. As far as we knew, the record also shows that over a quarter of a century of experimenting in making sugar from corn-stalks, has failed to produce an article which the polariscope will not prove to be unpalatable sugar. We mention these points to prevent our being so much divided on the great and, secondly, profitable sugar industry of conquering it. The cost of all that is needed to make unrefined sugar from fresh beets and dried beets have been very fully published in this and in Europe; but more of this in future papers.

Drying-kilns are the most hopeful means to keep a bright low cost at hand quantity of small fruits in this climate; but the climate is not suitable for such berries if the farmer's tools be rusty.

No farmer should be satisfied of his plain clothes, either on the farm or at the market places. Jean pants or brogan shoes are no evidence of his superiority, no more than fine broadcloth and jewelry are evidence of nobility.

In these adverse times farmers should recollect that ships, freighted for distant shores, do not turn about at the first adverse wind, but beat onward straight or oblique to the point laid down in the sailing orders. Grand example for equivocating men.

Alcohol applied immediately will give instant relief to burns and scalds, and generally prevent blistering. If it is a part of the body that cannot be immersed in the alcohol, apply it with a piece of cotton wet with it. Keep it saturated with it. Avoid the fire when using it, as it is inflammable.

Every indication and condition of the period point to the necessity of concentrating the energies and means of the average farmer on a smaller area of land, and giving to that the best thorough culture and all the manure possible. The profit of farming—if a profit is to be had—must come from crops of a larger yield and improved quality.

Apples are the best articles of which to make vinegar. If cider cannot be cheaply obtained, take apples and mash them, or cook them, and set away until fermentation ceases to be exhausted. Then strain off, through a close strainer, the liquid. Fill cask, demijohn or jug full, and leave the stopper out until acetous fermentation discharges the scum. Then cork tightly, keeping it where it will not freeze. The vessel of vinegar can be replenished as it is used out. Apple peelings, if carefully set away to ferment, and the clear juice put into the vinegar, will always keep a plenty on hand.

Farming for Profit.

WHILE many farmers have been used to consider that stock growing and feeding and the raising of grain on the same farm must be but unsuccessfully carried out as to make the farm essentially a stock or a grain farm, the better class of our farmers well know that the fertility of a farm cannot be kept up successfully unless it is stocked with animals fully sufficient at least to consume all the coarser products of the land. While it is true that new land may produce grain exclusively for some years, without apparent serious diminution of its fertility, it is a fact nevertheless, that when the lack of fertility does become apparent to the eye and the pocket of the owner, the cost of restoring the fertility of the land will be in due proportion to the exhaustion. This is indeed true in anycase. Hence it is evident that, inasmuch as the cost of artificial fertilization by commercial manures may cost more than the product, acre by acre, which land has been depleted at a cost greater than that at which it may be restored. Hence, again, it is evident, and a proposition well understood by intelligent farmers, that mixed farming is the most profitable in the end.

In all new countries the settler must perforce depend upon such crops as will bring cash returns soonest. Upon all soils adapted to its cultivation this is wheat, but he who continues its cultivation at the expense of other crops soon finds himself losing ground, and at last he finds he must climb the upgrade toward mixed farming, or else not for what he can get and commence anew. Those who wisely stock their farms early and thenceforward carry as large a proportion of meadow and pasture and such other crops as feed and fatten stock cheaply, become not only the best farmers but the richest in any country adapted to general farming.

In many sections of the East, farmers, years ago, upon the advent of cheap meat by railway from the West, made up their minds that the fattening of stock would no longer be profitable, and turned their attention especially to the production of grain and such crops as were not supposed to be capable of long transportation. They soon found that these crops must have manure. Now manure cannot be made on the farm without stock, and recourse was had to commercial fertilizers. But this class of fertilizers, however admirable in themselves, are not a pabulum sufficient. Hence they are returning to the good old mode, and the one that has brought English agriculture to its present state of high art. Not that we would ignore commercial fertilizers. They are good in their place, but will not supersede manures which act both mechanically and chemically.

Eastern farmers, finding that they must have home-made manures, begin to buy Western steers for fattening. They also bought Western cheap grains to supplement their own decreased yield. This will always continue since grain is cheaply raised West, and the superior system of feeding East secures not only profit on what they buy but upon the outcome of what they have to sell, since their nearness to the seaboard enables them to take advantage of a rising market. This lesson may be and is being taken advantage of by Western feeders. They are raising year by year a greater area of blue grass and other grasses adapted to early spring, late fall and winter pasturage, and which, when combined with the great corn crops of the prairie region of the West, enables them to produce cattle, hogs and sheep at a minimum cost, at the same time giving them increased fertility to the land from the manure naturally made.—Prairie Farmer.

Ice a Luxury Farmers Should Have.

After harvest, when there is leisure, make an artificial pond—a large, deep pond in which fish can be kept and pure ice obtained for the ice-house in winter. One or more such ponds should be made on every farm. There are but few farms that will not admit of just such ponds. They should be surrounded by a fence so as to keep the cattle out, admitting them to the water at but one place. Those who have the interest to look after their stock in view will see that they are provided, at this season of the year, with an abundance of clear, cold water. The writer was once conversing with a well-to-do farmer on the subject of ice, telling him how easy it was to have a supply that would render the ice season much more endurable. "It is easy for you," he replied, "for you have a large stream of water convenient; but I have nothing, within four miles, larger than the little run down yonder," pointing to a small brook that ran from one corner of his place to the other. "That is sufficient," we answered, and pointed out to him three or four places where he could dig out small ponds without encroaching on his land one particle. He went right to work with plow and scraper, and in two days had three large ponds made, which not only furnished plenty of ice for winter, but bathing-places and "fishing-holes" for the boys, and good watering-places for stock during the summer. This was more than ten years ago, and the ponds still do duty, with an occasional dredging out to keep them deep. They afford a good supply during the driest season. A pile of ice eight feet square and the same height is enough for family use. For such a pile, build the frame-work of scantling, the same height, and there must be a foot of sawdust all around the ice—sides, bottom and top. The house can be made on the simplest plan, using two frames of four-inch stuff for bottom and top, nailing the boards on these upright posts. Only a single wall is needed. —New England Farmer.

"Lice! Big Lice!"

Not so fast, my friend; for if you would but stop and think a moment only, women and children that have been raised from bed of sickness, suffering and almost death, by the use of Hop Bitters, you would say: "Truth, glorious truth." See "Truths," in another column.

The National Scourge.

It is estimated that the annual damages caused by the ravages of insects and worms exceed $150,000,000 in the United States alone. Truly an enormous loss! Yet it stinks into insignificance when compared with the losses of annihilation of scrofulous matter (tubercles) in the lungs. Obviously, the principal remedies required are (1) a powerful alterative, or blood purifier, to arrest the accumulations and also cleanse the blood of the scrofulous matter, and (2) a mild cathartic to expel the diseased matter from the system. This course of treatment, in conjunction with a strict hygienic regime, has proved the most successful method of curing this disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the best alterative and cathartic remedies before the public, and have been alone used by thousands of cases of consumption with the most marked efficacy. Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, at Buffalo, N. Y., affords special and scientific advantages to consumptives, not only possessing the best medical and hygienic means of treatment, but having the essential advantage of being situated in a climate where the inhabitants are healthy free from this disease.

"I have much pleasure in stating that your Vegetine deserves to be ranked as a valuable blood purifier, alterative and tonic. I have used it with perfect success. My wife suffered for a number of years with Dyspepsia, and by using the first two bottles of Vegetine, has gained in flesh and strength, and is now feeling in perfect health. DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and ACUE Or CHILLS and FEVER. The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases one bottle has been sufficient for a cure, and while families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have the DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamps on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the labels on each bottle. If my private stamps are not on each bottle, do not purchase, or you will be deceived. DR. I have found it especially useful in those cases of debility following exhaustion and the debility following diphtheria, it has done wonders. I can unhesitatingly use it in all affections of the throat and lungs. In all cases commended hopeless it has given relief, and in all others are fast recovering. Among those are consumptives in the last stages of disease. Some diseases have resisted more than this. Some diseases disappear, and in fact for debility from any cause, I know nothing equal to it. PUBLIC NOTICE. I, JOHN HANNAH, being a blacksmith by trade, feel often felt the want of some convenient utensils I could notice from at the forge, so that I could work it as a matter of advantage. This induced me to make many experiments with different substances which relieved the feel produced sickness. It was on one of these occasions that I discovered the wonderful effects of Electro-Silicon on the human system.

I had a defect in three of my fingers, which were lame or shut up in my hand in such a manner by the contraction of the cords, that they were very inconvenient to me in my daily avocations. I could not handle my tools as I wished, and often thought I would have them cut off to get them out of the way. I have used everything that offered any hope of relief, but all to no effect. Well, I say, I was worrying with Electro-Silicon at the forge, and of course could not prevent its coming in contact with my hands.

I took no notice of the effect it had produced, until one day, wishing to use my hammer, I grasped mine with my crooked hand, and much to my surprise I found my crooked fingers straighten out, and had as much use of them as ever. I could hardly believe my eyes. I showed my hands to my wife and family, and a general rejoicing was the result.

I told a neighbor living about a mile from my shop what had a came here, caused by the words being communicated by them all over. I sent him a bottle of Electro-Silicon Liniment, and told him to use it thoroughly. He did so, and at the end of three months he was able to throw aside his cane and walk as well as ever. It had acted just as it did in my case—by casting a perfect cure. I gave it to several of my neighbors and friends for miles around, who were suffering from Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sore Throat, Weak Back, Weak Kidneys, Stiff Joints, Sprains, Bruises, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites, Chilblains, Felons, Sore Nipples, Caked Breasts, Ulcers, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Earache, Toothache, Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Pains in the Back, Chest, Limbs and Joints, Stiff Neck, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Corns, Bunions, Chilblains, Frost Bites, Sore Throat, Quinsy, Croup, Diphtheria, Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, Influenza, Spasms, Cramps, Colic, Pains in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Female Complaints, Rheumatism in the Joints, Contraction of Muscles, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Sprains, Bruises, Wounds, Weak Back, Kidneys, Hips, Loins, Chest, Limbs and Joints, Stiff Neck, Scalds, Burns, Frost Bites, Chilblains, Corns, Bunions, Sore Throat, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Pains and Aches of all kinds, Cramps, Spasms, Sore Nipples, Caked Breasts, Ulcers, Boils, Felons, Sores, Wounds, Piles, Fistula, Files, Ringworm, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Frost Bites, Sore Throat, Sore Eyes, Toothache, Earache, Headache, Sore Throat, Sore Eyes, Toothache, Earache, Headache, Sore Throat, Sore Eyes, Toothache, Earache, Headache

WILL, WEDD & SMITH.

DAY, NOV. 9, 1878.

For President

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

FOR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Nov. 8, 1878.

[illegible] tool [illegible] [illegible] up [illegible] the heavens have looked for [illegible] a day, was first discovered by the [illegible] of St. Mark's Church, on Thirty [illegible] Saturday. Upon opening, the [illegible] gate, it became evident that the [illegible] had been [illegible] During the [illegible] A dark lantern and a shovel [illegible] a heap of recently upturned earth, directly over the vault in which the body of the late A. T. Stewart was deposited, and a hasty examination of the premises revealed the astounding fact that the body of the late million[illegible] had been removed.

The startling intelligence was at [illegible] to police headquarters, and [illegible] Superintendent Walling [illegible] Acting Inspector Dilks, Captain Hilton, (the present [illegible] of the lower A. T. Stewart & Co. [illegible] store) and the sexton of the Church [illegible] and a large force of police [illegible] the scene. A careful [illegible] about every foot of [illegible] was then made, and through it the [illegible] have crept to effect their nefarious work. The vault occupies a commanding position, being in the centre of the Churchyard which fronts on Second avenue. Three large [illegible] trees [illegible] their huge branches over the tomb, and their dark shadows afford a [illegible] of protection to these men who must have been [illegible] in their [illegible]. The vault is constructed of brick, and is arched at the top. The floor is twelve feet below the surface of the ground, and a granite stone staircase leads to the bottom of the vault, which is [illegible] eight by ten feet. When Mr. Stewart's body was placed there on the 15th of April, 1876, it had three receptacles first, a coffin of oak, covered with velvet cloth, then a leaden case, hermetically sealed, and a heavy cedar box.

The thieves, after unscrewing the lid of the outer box, cut open the leaden case which enclosed the casket, with a knife, showing that the work was not done by professionals who would have brought the ever present "dummy" into play.

The haste was once [illegible] though, the removal of the body was only the work of a moment at first, though it seems almost incredible that such an act could be successful and secretly accomplished. It is undisclosed exposed a piece as St. Marks Church yard, but the explanatory circumstance is that the lead covering the policeman on second avenue, extends half a mile above and below the scene of the robbery, giving ample time for the thieves to hit the body of Mr. Stewart from the place it in some suitable receptacle, carry it across the Church yard, and lift it over the high iron fence into a wagon.

In looking about for a motive for this outrage, that which stands out in greatest prominence is—reward for the recovery of the body. Judge Hilton declares that no reward whatever will be offered, and how the wretched matter will end is just finding out until some new light is thrown on the subject. There has been a prevailing idea that a great quantity of gold and valuables was buried with the body, and since the discovery of the loss it has come out that about a month ago the sexton discovered that the marble slab at the head of the vault had been tampered with, and to deceive any person intending to rob the grave, this slab was moved about twenty five feet from the true entrance.

This shocking occurrence has excited universal and deep indignation not only against the criminals, but against the police authorities. The latter cannot ignore the popular feeling, and this circumstance, together with the prominence of the outraged family, has induced them to great activity. Every available detective is employed on the case and the chief of police headquarters is one of much excitement. The nature of the object stolen renders its success [illegible]

[illegible] them if caught, for its [illegible] of [illegible] is of [illegible] [illegible] Mr. Wells [illegible] Mr. Stewart's partner, exclaim [illegible] learning of the robbery, "It is [illegible] that in a city in which even the dead are not permitted to rest in a grave are to get away from. There doesn't seem to be any protection."

It was the intention of the family to remove Mr. Stewart's remains to a final resting place in the magnificent mausoleum now building at Garden City, Long Island, and the [illegible] to be erected, this despicable [illegible] to each of them.

With the usual noisy demonstrations about the polling places and the flashing of calcium lights around the offices in "New Jupiter Synagogue" political parties have met, fought and disbanded with no one killed, if I except one poor fellow who being famous in the cellar of his home upon hearing of Tammany's defeat. He had been prepared a position in case of its success, and he could not stand up under his disappointment.

Yes, Tammany Hall which ever since Tweed's time has stood, among the intelligent honest men of all parties as a synonym to political trickery and corruption, has at last been overthrown, vanquished, "busted." As Sachem Kelly announced to a sorrowing crowd of operators on election night, he was "routed all along the line." During this contest party lines were for a time forgotten in the general determination to get rid from under the heel of Tammany. Tammany, in turn, nerved to desperate endeavors by this unwonted opposition, centered its energies on the one task of electing its Mayor, Augustus Schell, careless of what should be done of the rest of its ticket. But it went down. New York had made up its mind. Edward Cooper received [illegible] twenty thousand majority, and John Kelley has gone to meet Ben Butler. This result is very gratifying, if for no other reason than that it shows that this city is neither disfranchised nor sunk in apathy. But, on the other hand, it will not do to crow too loudly before we get out of the woods. Too many schools exists and powerful, and these have been such things known as its going bold of opposition candidates after the election of the latter, and quietly leading them into the Wigwam. We must wait and see whether it will succeed in capturing Mr. Cooper.

RADIX.

The Revival of Prosperity.

The thunder of the elections is dying away to its last rolling echoes; the stormy excitement, and the passion of partisan prejudice, have cleared off; the public has already locked itself and shivered what immediate damage and good have been done, and it is now time to take a clear, sensible, comprehensive business view of the situation and its promises for the future.

In the first place, the results of the elections have settled it beyond controversy that this nation will certainly resume specie payments on the first day of January next. Whether you like it or not cannot now alter this inevitable conclusion. It is wise, manly, and necessary to cease railing against unalterable fate, and look the coming fact squarely in the face, like intelligent and honorable men, and resolve to make the best and the most of it. It is wise and patriotic to lay aside a partizanship and opposition which are no longer of any avail, and, therefore, childish, and resolve that the policy which the country has finally and firmly adopted shall be made, so far as any help of yours can make it a grand success. On the first day of next January we shall begin a new year, and a new era, by resuming specie payments. In so doing, we shall resume something greater and higher than mere gold and silver—then United States will resume their high and honorable place among the nations of the earth as one of the great powers whose slightest word or promise is just as good as gold and will soon be considered as valuable as gold wherever a ship carries our flag, or a traveler carries our currency. It rests with the people to decide whether we shall stop, on that day, resume something highest and noblest of all—our common brotherhood and pride of patriotism, which will sustain, perfect and enlarge the American financial policy, then and thereafter to go into effect, with a universal and patriotic support and encouragement. Along with our resumption of the [illegible]

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Lincoln, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

Mississippi—Meager returns; opposition to the Democratic ticket very slight.

South Carolina—Largely Democratic. Congressional delegation all Democratic—a gain of three.

Tennessee—Election quiet and a light vote cast. Marks, Dem., for Governor, has a large majority. The Congressional delegation will be composed of nine Democrats and one Republican—a Democratic gain of one.

DOMESTIC.

AT a fire in a St. Louis tenement house, on the 6th, Christ Mueller and Mrs. Kettering were fatally burned.

FROM the second annual report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, it appears that the cost of inland mail transportation for the fiscal year ending June 30 was $16,634,921. Cost of railway mail transportation, $6,566,593. Estimate for the next year for inland mail transportation, $20,700,000.

THE discovery was made, in New York City, on the 5th, that the remains of the late A. T. Stewart had been, the night before, stolen from the family vault in St. Mark's Churchyard. The casket was found broken open and the body was missing. The robbers were notified. It was thought the body had been stolen in the hope that a reward would be offered for its recovery.

THE Treasury Department purchased 950,000 ounces of silver, on the 7th.

AT a meeting of the Cabinet, in Washington, on the 5th, Secty McCrary submitted reports showing that peace and quiet prevailed on the Rio Grande, with a fair prospect of continuance.

A JEWELRY store on Eighth avenue, between Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets, New York, was robbed, on the evening of the 7th, a large number of persons witnessing the robbery. Two men entered two men entered the store, one of whom closed the door and the other stood guard over the merchant and his clerks with drawn revolvers. Two confederates stood outside and ordered the crowd away, while another broke the window-cases and gathered up a bag full of watches and chains. The thieves got away with their plunder.

THERE were in the United States Treasury, on the 9th, $348,506,700 in Government bonds to secure bank circulation, and $15,980,460 to secure public deposits. It was stated, unofficially that after the first of January next, as an aid to the resumption of specie payments, it was very likely the Treasury Department will send to parties desiring it the standard silver dollar in quantities of $1,000 and upward, free of transportation, in exchange for like sums of greenbacks deposited with depository banks.

THE Village of Cape May, a noted summer watering-place on the Atlantic coast, was almost destroyed by fire on the morning of the 9th. The fire originated in the attic of the Ocean House, and, fed by high winds, spread thence to the principal hotels and cottages adjacent thereto, nearly all of which were totally destroyed. About forty acres were burned over, and the aggregate loss is stated to be $700,000. The fire was incendiary in its origin.

A DISPATCH from Pembina, D. T., on the 8th, says that Sheriff W. H. Jayson, of Dallas, Tex., who was in pursuit of William Collins, of the famous band of train-robbers, found him in the former place and attempted to arrest him. Collins resisted, and the men exchanged fire with fatal effect—both dropping dead in two minutes.

IN another letter to Minister Welsh, on the subject of the Halifax award, Secty Evarts takes direct issue with the finding of the Commission, both as to the amount of the award and the manner in which it was rendered, holding that the sum of $5,500,000 is an outrageous and utterly indefensible price to place upon the benefits of twelve years of sealing in Canadian waters, and that, if paid at all by the United States, it must be regarded as covering the value of such benefits in perpetuity, and not for any term of years, and that the adoption of this or any other award by the Commission, by a bare majority, is not in accordance with the terms of the treaty providing for the Commission, and that the award is not, therefore, binding upon the Government.

THREE brothers, named James, David and John Tabor, owned and operated a farm near Chenango, N. Y. James and David disagreed as to how it should be run. A few days ago, David killed James with a pitchfork and then went into an adjoining wood and blew out his brains with a shot-gun.

GEORGE FESSLER, the defaulting Treasurer of Stark County, Ohio, pleaded guilty to the charge of embezzlement, on the 11th, and was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $60,000.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

NOT many minutes after being informed of his election, on the evening of the 5th, Alexander Smith, Republican Congressmaker from the Twelfth (N. Y.) District, died from acute gastritis, occasioned by overwork and exposure during his canvass.

ON the 7th, Capt. Condon, the released Fenian, called upon the President and warmly thanked him for securing his release from prison.

ON the 8th, Mrs. A. T. Stewart offered a reward of $25,000 for the recovery of the stolen body of her late husband and the conviction of the thieves. A proportionate sum would be paid for the recovery of the body.

ACCORDING to a NEW YORK telegram of the 8th, the liabilities of Dodd, Brown & Co., of St. Louis, are $1,700,110. Actual available assets, $960,800.

THE NEW YORK Commercial Advertiser of the 8th contains a table of the next National House of Representatives, in which the Democrats are given 144 Congressmen; the Republicans, 132, and Greenbackers, 13, with California yet to elect.

GOV. HAMPTON, of South Carolina, met with a serious accident, on the 7th, while hunting, the Governor's mule became frightened, and, the bridle breaking, he leaped from the saddle. By the fall, the Governor's right leg was broken in two places, the bone protruding, and his ankle was badly hurt.

THE Republican majorities in Iowa at the October election, on the State ticket, are given officially, as follows: For Secretary of State, 10,987; Auditor, 14,844; Treasurer, 10,728; Register of Land Office, 9,945; Attorney-General, 15,196; Supreme Judge, 8,744; Supreme Clerk, 11,845; Reporter of Supreme Court, 10,036.

HENRY GREENEBAUM, formerly President of the German-American Savings Bank, of Chicago, has been held to bail in the sum of $25,000 to answer to the charge of embezzling $90,000 of the funds of that institution.

NORMAN B. JUDD, formerly United States Minister to Berlin and a Member of the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses, died in Chicago, on the morning of the 11th, aged sixty-three years.

YELLOW-FEVER NEWS.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Minister Bayard Taylor has submitted to an operation for dropsy, and it is found that his kidneys and liver are seriously affected. The operation was successful and his condition is favorable.

—"If Dr. Schliemann," says a foreign critic, "discovered a tomb in the bed of the Busento near Cosenza, with all its treasures, he would have much many reason to conclude it was the tomb of Alaric than he has now to imagine he has found the tomb of Agamemnon at Mycenæ."

—Gen. Grant witnessed the attempted assassination of King Alphonso. He was standing, when the shot was fired, at a window of the Hotel de Paris in Madrid, overlooking the Puerta del Sol, where he was watching the progress of the royal cavalcade which had just passed before him. He clearly saw the flash of the assassin's pistol.

Davis fell from the grounds of the Executive Mansion in Richmond during the war and was killed; William Davis died of diphtheria in Memphis in 1873, and Jefferson, the only surviving son, has, as already announced, recently died in Memphis of the yellow fever.

—The only private mortuary chapel in the United States is in Oakwood Cemetery, Troy, N. Y. It belongs to the wealthy Warren family. It is built of stone, with a vault underneath, and has handsome appurtenances of Episcopal worship. It is an imperishable and a stained window of great value. The only services held there are at the burials of members of the family.

—A nephew of Robert Ingersoll was cruelly hazed at Cornell University. He was bound hand and foot, gagged, and then taken to a stone wall. Here cheerfully submitted to downward, and was given to understand that unless he would do as he was bidden he would be dropped to the ground. His manhood was shaved off, his face colored and his clothes ruined with paint.

—Mr. Henry Bergh has been much impressed by the efforts of a Georgia lady to found a Society for the Protection of Animals. He writes to the President of a branch society in Savannah: "Suppose this world were composed of such public-spirited and benevolent ladies, instead of the fashionable creatures who look for the ball-rooms of noted watering resorts, what a blessed abode this planet of ours would be!"

The Cares of Wealth.

A comical incident of the recent savages-bank run in Poughkeepsie, as related by the Eagle, illustrates woman's ways. Two sisters, living with a lady in that city, took alarm and went to their mistress for counsel. She advised them by all means to leave the deposit in the bank. But they didn't; they took it out. And having it in their possession, they were troubled to know where to keep it. So they went it to the lady to keep till the next morning. It was decided that it should be buried in the earth in a flower-pot standing at the window, and there it was deposited. Having so much money near her, the lady did not sleep well, and she disinterred the precious trust and put it under her pillow. With the early dawn the owners of the money appeared at the lady's room. The door being unlocked, they entered and went directly to the flower-pot. "Oh, my God! my God! I am ruined entirely. The money's gone! They have dug it up." A gentle voice from the bed was heard: "Here, take your money. I lay awake till morning taking care of it, and just as I got asleep you came waking me, and all because you were two fools."—N. Y. Tribune.

Five Days With Brigands.

Signor Egidio Sarconi, Deputy Vice-Chancellor in the Ministry of Grace and Justice, set out from Rome about the middle of August last, to enjoy his month's holiday at Corbeo Perticara, a hamlet in the Basilicata, and about half a day's journey south of Potenza, the chief town of the Province. His family had preceded him there, and in his eagerness to join it with the least delay possible he stayed no longer in Potenza than to hire a vehicle, accepting in fact the first that offered itself.

On he went, anticipating the joyous reception in store for him, and—high legs a functionary as he was—thinking nothing of the law and as little of its breakers, when suddenly, some six miles from Potenza, he was aroused from his reverie by two great voices bidding the driver pull up. Presently two stalwart faces appeared at the window; two rifles were leveled at him; and he was told to alight immediately. Unarmed himself, with no assistance near him for miles around, and the driver most likely an accomplice of his assailants, there was nothing for it but to comply.

Forth the brigands loomed him by hand and foot, carried him up the hill that ascended from the roadside, and on reaching a dense forest of beech threw him down on the ground. They relieved him of all his valuables, including some 100 lire he had about him, and then they told him that unless 5,000 scudi were paid to their chief he would be put to death. Vainly did he plead poverty and protest that his family did not possess that sum. His captors were inexorable, and with many a brutal threat forced him to write to his relatives for the sum required. By this time it was half-past, and with his hands and feet bound so tightly that the cords cut his flesh, he had to content himself for length on the bare, damp earth, while the brigands slept beside him.

On the same spot, and very nearly in the same position, he spent the whole night and part of the next day with scarce a morsel of food or a drop to drink, till he received orders to march. His feet were just so far left free as to enable him to walk with difficulty over the heights and hollows of their devious path; and, were he to flag, the aching limbs forced from him an involuntary cry of pain, his captors would push him before them with the muzzles of their rifles, and keep him in perpetual fear of being shot by accident. Four days and four nights of this bodily anguish did he undergo, and till on the fifth day a chance of escape presented itself. The brigands, who were now right and to the left of him, had their eyes fixed on their evidently-approaching victim. Their attention was entirely engrossed by the newcomer, and he, seeing his opportunity, sprang down the hill over which their journey lay. They had not gone far when, being always a little ahead of his captors, he got a glimpse through the trees of five carabineers who were patrolling the neighborhood. The moment he saw the uniform and the red stripe of their trousers he cared not a straw for them, though they were a full rifle-shot away. By this time the brigands had also seen the carabineers, and without further heed for their captive, they took to their heels in the opposite direction. Signor Sarconi was at once unbound and conveyed under an escort of two carabineers to his overjoyed family at Corleto Perticara, while the latter, they gave chase to the fugitives. These gentlemen, however, are still at large, and their victim, in spite of all the conjugal and filial care lavished on him, has not yet recovered from the privations and actual wounds inflicted on him during his five days' captivity.—*Rome Cor. THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

FALLING LEAVES.

No more these spreading shades
Kissed with the tremulous sunshine on the grass
Invite to stretch my limbs, while white clouds pass
Above in fleecy braids.

Good-bye, good-bye, dear leaves!
For you stern autumn blows his trumpet-call,
Each tree that bears it, ere your glories fall,
In stole silence grieves.

But why entreat your stay,
Till winds and rains and chill November air
Have clogged your sap and left you fluttering there,
To wither day by day?

I know the time has come
When you must yield to a remorseless force,
Farewell, glad graduates of a summer's course,
Bound for your winter home—

In gold and crimson gray,
Whirling like children in a dancing group,
Or racing with the wind, a hurrying troop,
Hurter, whither who can say?

Descend on some privy roof
Or pavement, where the crowd shall tread you down
And you with the rubbish of the town
Or in some safe abode

Far from the city's din,
In woodland hollows, mixed with sheltering grass;
Or pools where soon the ice as with a glass
Shall frame your colors in;

Or floating down some stream,
To seek your fortune in an unknown land
Or blown about brown fields tumultuously,
Lose shadows in a dream.

Perhaps you lovely maid
May choose some bright survivors, as they fall
And range them in a vase or for chamber-wall
Perhaps you rustic's spade

May mix them with the earth
To fertilize his garden-beds and grow
The spring a splendor they shall bloom and live
In resurrection-birth.

Lake you, dear leaves, we come
And go, and know no whither we may speed.
We only trust that every path may lead
To an eternal home!

Hampton street was not the most inviting place in which to take up one's abode. Dingy-looking women stood about the dirty doorways and dilapidated windows, wasting their time in idle gossip; while still more untidy-looking children played about. In every way the air and aspect of the place showed that the essential element of health and comfort, cleanliness, was wanting.

This was the impression that Hampton street gave to John Trimmer and his wife as they passed slowly down it, eagerly looking for the right and to the left; but no bright spot met their eyes; all appeared equally uninviting.

"And yet it must be, John," wistfully observed the wife, as they paused before the only tenantless house in the street, "for there is no other within reach of our means, and you must live near the factory."

"But it is such a place to bring you and the children to!"

"It is not very pleasant;" but acting the part of a true wife, in trying to make the best of things, she added cheerfully, "but with soap and water will work wonders, even in this neighborhood."

So it was settled; and a few days after, Rachel and John Trimmer, with their little family, came to live in Hampton street.

It was very different to what they had been accustomed; the house was about the same size, but the pretty white-washed walls, which they had vacated on account of John's change of employment was situated in a far more agreeable locality.

But Mrs. Trimmer was not the woman to make vain lamentations. With her invaluable remedy—"try to make the best of things"—she set herself the task of transforming a very unsightly habitation into a neat and comfortable little dwelling, and by degrees a wonderful change took place in the appearance of the house.

The clean doorway, white step, and polished window distinguished Number Thirteen from the rest of the street, and was as much an index to the character of the inmates as a patched and clean dress, in contrast to rags and dirt, denotes the disposition of the wearer.

But the occupants of the neighboring houses did not look with eyes of approval on the new tenants, and many unkindly remarks were passed on them.

"Stuck-up!" said one; "ungrateful, I say. Mrs. Trimmer was considered, because she evinced no desire to spend half her mornings in gossiping, instead of setting her house in order. And her children, in their neat frocks and pinafores, were derisively termed, "the little ladies," as they passed on their way to home or to school.

Where a kindly disposition exists circumstances are always happening to alter such a state of affairs; and eventually, the dwellers in Hampton street began to regard the inhabitants of Number Thirteen with more favor.

One summer evening Rachel and her little girls were hastening home from a visit to her sister; and, as was usual on such occasions, they were bearing along with them a small but choice bouquet of roses—the finest that could be procured from Aunt Betsy's little garden.

Those flowers were very precious to the Trimmers, and the value of each was enhanced, as the locality in which they now dwelt prevented them from cultivating their own. Nevertheless, on entering Hampton street, when, on passing a group of gossips, a baby in arms bent forward and tried to grasp one of the fragrant treasures, and the mother of the child instinctively drew away the tiny hand, Rachel did not hesitate for a moment, but, with a kind smile, placed one of the finest roses in the outstretched fingers.

Even small as was this act of kindness, it made a favorable impression; and from that time the mother of the flower-loving baby ceased to raise her voice in the general outcry against Mrs. Trimmer, and she took an opportunity of saying:

"Perhaps our men would be happier husbands, and our little ones happier children, if a few more of us copied the ways of Number Thirteen."

And from that date the speaker, Mrs. Riley, was seldom seen chatting outside her cottage door, when her fine would have been employed by making all neat within, for the flower, with its delicate perfume and beauty, conveyed a message of love to that mother's heart, and raised her mind to better things; and as she thought of her own little child, whom she would like to expand into something as fair as the rose itself, she resolved to have things different in her own home, and, before long, another tidy-looking house improved the appearance of Hampton street.

Good examples are sometimes as influential as bad; but for some time no one seemed inclined to follow in Mrs. Riley's steps. Friends and acquaintances rather regarded her with disfavor, and said she was growing as unsociable and unsightly as some one else in the street.

But, beginning to experience the delights of cleanliness and order, she would not relapse into her ways again. Beside, she found a very pleasant and valuable companion in Mrs. Trimmer; for the incident of the flower had opened an acquaintance between them, and Rachel's influence was leading Mrs. Riley to think of even more important things in life than having a clean and tidy house.

When the church bells rang on a Sunday morning the new tenants were not the only ones in Hampton street now, as formerly, to obey the summons; but Mrs. Riley's husband and elder children wended their steps in that direction, while the mother stayed at home to cook the dinner and mind the baby.

But in the evening, this latter duty being deputed to the eldest girl, Mrs. Riley herself, with her good man beside her, took her seat in the pinaza and listened to the "glad tidings" that were sent to her "and to all people."

So the Sundays, which used to be the most dreary days of the week, were now very differently in those gone by. were now very differently in those gone by. Instead of being the dullest day of rest, and as Mrs. Riley told the neighbors, brought strength for the toil of the week.

But some received her well-meant words with derision, while others turned a deaf ear to her admonitions altogether; indeed, all followed their own ways, till another little kindness touched the heart of the dwellers in Hampton street.

In Number Eighteen lived a Mrs. Duncan, who earned a living by charring and washing. On account of her large family, she was constantly out at work hard all the week; yet she would have done pretty well had she been fortunate with her lodgers, but these often failed in their payments; and this, with the dearness of provisions, left Mrs. Duncan to have a hard time of it.

"There's no hopes of getting my Mary to service while this state of things lasts," she said, despondingly to a neighbor, on her return from work one evening.

"I thought you were looking out a place for her."

"So I was, and one of my ladies told me of a very good one to-day; but it is of no use going after it, for no one would take her without a proper stock of clothes."

"Couldn't you get a few things together?"

"Not now; if I had all that's due to me I might; but I can't press poor Mrs. Adams, as she is one she owes no nine shillings, and I know she'll pay me when she can: but my Mary will lose a good situation through it."

At this moment Mrs. Riley passed, and not wishing to appear unsociable, she stopped to inquire how Mrs. Duncan was getting on.

"Not as well as I like, thank you;" and then the poor widow again narrated her difficulties.

Calling on Mrs. Trimmer the next afternoon to ask her advice about making an old dress of her own into a new one for her little Hannah, Mrs. Riley mentioned the poor widow's trouble.

The narrator found a ready sympathizer in Rachel, who, in the kindness of her heart, said:

"It takes a good bit to set a girl up for service," and Mrs. Riley, to whom every penny was of consequence, shook her head thoughtfully as she spoke.

"Yes, I know it does; but a small stock would be better than none. A few things might do at first, and the girl could add what was necessary as she got her wages."

"But even so, it would be more than one person could afford to give."

"Yes, I'm afraid so," and as Mrs. Trimmer remembered her husband's narrow income and their many immediate wants, she felt it would not be just to themselves and their children to find the whole of the sum required for Mary's outfit, much as I would please them to do so, for John Trimmer was as kind as his wife.

But the idea of the girl losing a comfortable situation troubled the good woman very much; and after some cogitation—though she knew nothing personally of the Duncans, except that they were reported to be striving and honest—she devised a plan that could be accomplished by a little neighborly aid; and stepping in to Mrs. Riley's, she communicated her thoughts to —Shoot as I was told 'em, by shiminy!—Hays.

—Somebody carry me out on a chip.—Sam Cary

—That's a blamed sight worse than 8 to 7.—Hewitt.

—Don't show fat as much as they did. Scarcely.

—Bring on your Thanksgiving. Let's have two of 'em.

—Now Brick Pomeroy will take some "Hot Drops" in "this'n."

—My cake is all dough. Didn't put in enough Saleratus.—North.

Well, fellow Democrats, lightning struck your Barnes thundering hard.

—Here, Ben. Butler, that's my hole. —A Mouse.—But Ben got there first.

—Makes no difference, you imps of perdition, the Chinese must go.! D. K.

—O Michigan, my Michigan. 'Tis well 'tis Croswell—by a large majority.

—Yes, "the woods were full of 'em." We know it, for we saw them climbing trees.

—Butler had an absolute paper majority in Massachusetts, but it depreciated awful fast.

—"What we want is votes equal to the demands of trade." That's what they want now.

—And this is what the greenback dollar says now: "I know that my redeemer liveth."

—We took the hair this time; in 1880 we'll take the hide. No amendment to this allowed.

—Do you still love the poor laboring man, Moses? Well, make it ten per cent. and a $100 attorney fee.

—Not one word from Peter Cooper, Peter, the Republican cock has crowed more than thrice already.

—You fellows made bigger fools of yourselves than I ever did of myself, and that's useless.—G. F. Train.

—If you want to make something out of nothing just go to work and make something out of the N. G. party.

—Moses took out his pencil and wrote "This is 40,000 Greenback majority." But the people wouldn't take it.

—Now let's holler "fred" like blazes, that is, let's don't go outside of certain limits, though.—Democratic Party.

—Mr. Smith, Mr. Smith, if Saleratus sells for ten cents a pound, how long will it take, to make up that $40,000 assessment?

—Michigan will elect a Greenback Governor by 40,000 majority, and most of the Greenback Republican for Congress.—M. W. Field, October, 1878.

—The N. G.'s had enough ballots printed to elect every candidate, but they couldn't use half of them. They can't deny now that there is such a thing as over production."

—See, how many Greenback Clubs has Brick Pomeroy organized? O yes, 6,000 When Brick was a boy he used to pile up little blocks as high as he could reach—and every time to did it some other boy would come along and knock them all down.

She must be removed from the channel, as the danger of entering the harbor is increased. The contractors, a number of days before the accident had sunk a crib under water, and were waiting for fine weather to put on the superstructure. The crib extended into the lake some fifty feet beyond the pier light, unknown to the master of the Owen, and in entering the harbor during a gale struck this sunken crib and wrecked his vessel.

ARSON BURGLARY.—The fourth in the series of burglaries during the past summer and fall in Charlevoix, occurred on Tuesday night of last week at the Postoffice. About half past ten on that evening, W. C. Newman was passing the postoffice, when his attention was attracted by a noise in or about the building, which caused him to stop. He immediately heard a sound as of a window being raised or lowered, and soon the head and then the body of a person protruded itself from behind the building. The burglar discovering he was seen, immediately disappeared before Mr. Newman could collect his thoughts. He proceeded at once to the establishment of Sheriff McLeod, and informed Angus Cameron, who was there, of what he had seen, and the latter gentleman at once kindly notified the Postmaster, who repaired at once to the store. He found about $5.00 of telegraph funds gone and an amount of small change from the money drawer of the postoffice.

The telegraph funds were kept in a place where no person not well acquainted with the premises could have found them; in, fact every feature of the operation indicates unmistakably, that the burglar was a resident of Charlevoix. Sheriff McLeod examined the premises immediately, and closely inspected the fresh tracks about the window.

About midsummer of the present year, the establishments of M J. Stockman and Dr. Lewis were entered and the money drawers cleaned out—Mr. Stockman losing about $10.00, and Dr. Lepis a smaller sum. Later in the season the disk of the Steamer Gazelle was broken open in the absence of the crew and a sum of money taken. Now comes a fresh offence of the same nature, as if the burglar emboldened by his successes, had determined to make a business of his bold crime. The business men of Charlevoix, however, have had enough of this kind of business, and a funeral or an arrest will be heard of in these parts nearly simultaneous with the next burglary.

CROSE & DORMAN.—The gentlemen constituting this firm came to Charlevoix in September last, since which time they have erected the fine large building on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets, and to day they occupy it. The building is the finest on the street, is substantially built and neatly furnished in all of its apartments as far as completed. They have in their store now a line of fresh groceries and canned goods. In the spring they will complete some parts of the building now unnessary to be used, and a first class bakery will be added to their business. Mr. Dorman is a practical baker, and will make his business a success. We bespeak for Crose & Dorman a liberal patronage.

—See, how many Greenback Clubs has Brick Pomeroy organized? O yes, 9,000. When Brick was a boy he used to pile up little blocks as high as he could reach—and every time he did it some other boy would come along and knock them all down.

New Goods.—We wish to inform the people of Charlevoix that we have got the finest stock of dry goods ever brought to this place. Also a nice stock of winter shawls, hats and caps, lumberman's shirts, blankets, horse blankets' ladies jackets, also a large stock of clothing, and lots of other goods too numerous to mention. Call and examine.

An opinion expressed at the time you speak of that the Treaty of Berlin was asleep and unfruitful was undoubtedly construed by you into that meaning.

That Social.—The Ladies Aid Society Social held at the residence of A. Buttars on Tuesday evening, was successful in all respects. It was a "house warming," as well, Mr. Buttars having just moved into his new quarters. The walls were made to shake and the chandeliers to jingle with the merry turmoil of the young folks in every one of the many commodious rooms. That excellent Haines piano was brought into use, and made to do its part in the general joyousness. Oysters disappeared in marvelous quantities, and organ music rivaled in just as marvelously. The society have $25 net profit as a result of this occasion, and the participants have pleasant recollections of the affair.

The Chicago Times says Grant is probably the only person whose candidacy would defeat the Republicans in 1880; and it is lucky for us this warning comes thus timely.

Marine.—A Chicago paper states that the schooner D R Owen still lies in the channel at Manistee where she sunk some time ago. She must be removed from the channel, as the danger of entering the harbor is increased. The contractors a number of days before the accident had sunk a crib under water, and were waiting for fine weather to put on the superstructure. The crib extended into the lake some fifty feet beyond the pier light, unknown to the master of the Owen, and in entering the harbor during a gale struck this sunken crib and wrecked his vessel.

The propellers Empire State at Fountain City both passed here Sunday on their way up, the former wooding at Northport and the latter at Beaver Harbor.

—Navigation will be virtually closed before another issue of our paper reaches its readers.

The Charlevoix was to have left Traverse City for Charlevoix this (Tuesday) afternoon, on her last trip.

—The Menominee will be put upon the route between Chicago and Mackinac again in the spring.

Another Burglary.—The fourth in the series of burglaries during the past summer and fall in Charlevoix, occurred on Tuesday night of last week at the Postoffice. About half past ten on that evening, W. C. Newman was passing the postoffice, when his attention was attracted by a noise in or about the building, which caused him to stop. He immediately heard a sound as of a window being raised or lowered, and soon the head and then the body of a person protruded itself from behind the building. The burglar discovering he was seen, immediately disappeared before Mr. Newman could collect his thoughts. He proceeded at once to the establishment of sheriff McLeod, and informed him of what he had seen, and the latter gentleman at once kindly notified the Postmaster, who repaired at once to the spot. He found about $5.00 of telegraph funds gone and an amount of small change from the money drawer of the postoffice.

The telegraph funds were kept in a place where no person not well acquainted with the premises could have found them: in fact every feature of the operation indicates unmistakably, that the burglar was a resident of Charlevoix. Sheriff McLeod examined the premises immediately, and closely inspected the fresh tracks about the window.

About midsummer of the present year, the establishments of M. J. Stockman and Dr. Lewis were entered and the money drawers cleaned out—Mr. Stockman losing about $10.00, and Dr. Lapis a smaller sum. Later in the season the desk of the Steamer Gazelle was broken open in the absence of the crew and some sum of money taken. Now comes a fresh offence of the same nature, as if the burglar emboldened by his successes, had determined to make a business of his bold crime. The business men of Charlevoix, however, have had enough of this kind of business, and a funeral or an arrest will be heard of in these parts nearly simultaneous with the next burglary.

Crone & Dorman.—The gentlemen constituting this firm came to Charlevoix in September last, since which time they have erected the fine large building on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets, and to day they occupy it. The building is the finest on the street, is substantially built and neatly furnished in all of its apartments as far as completed. They have in their store now a line of fresh groceries and canned goods. In the spring they will complete some parts of the building now unnecessary to be used, and a first class bakery will be added to their business. Mr. Dorman is a practical baker, and will make his business a success. We bespeak for Crone & Dorman a liberal patronage.

The National Commercial Convention.

The following are the resolutions in full adopted by the National and International Convention recently held in Chicago:

Resolved, 1. That the continued prosperity of the agricultural, manufacturing, mining and commercial interests of the country cannot be secured without such a development of our commerce with other countries as will afford a steady and growing market for our surplus products, and to insure this it is the duty of Congress to promote, by all wise and Constitutional means, the opening and improvement of such lines of transportation by land and water as are of general and National importance.

2. That the high rates upon freight and passenger traffic charged by the Union and Central Pacific Railroads under this only highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific a monopoly as burdensome as it is extensive, and we call upon Congress to take measures at the coming session to compel these corporations, which owe their existence to the liberality of the Nation, to forthwith cheapen transportation.

3. That the interests of the Government and the people alike demand the early completion of competing lines of railroad to the Pacific, and we therefore earnestly invite Congress to grant material aid to the Texas Pacific Railroad, and to extend the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

4. That we look with the countries lying south of us which is desired by them and will be the most profitable to us, cannot be entered upon or conducted successfully without the mail facilities which it is the province of the Government to furnish, and we therefore recommend the immediate provision by Congress of ocean mail service between the chief ports of the United States and the important commercial points on the coast of South America, in American built and owned steamships of not less than 2,500 tons burden.

5. That a suitable and cheap water line, permanently navigable by schooners of 1,000 tons burden, should be opened up between the waters of Virginia and North Carolina, as a means of enabling the greater part of the domestic shipping of the Atlantic coast to avoid the dangers of Cape Hatteras, and we commend this measure to the favorable consideration of Congress.

6. That a delegate in our name and State represented in this Convention be appointed and charged with the duty of visiting Washington City, and presenting the resolutions of this Convention to the President and Congress of the United States.

A resolution was also adopted that the Chairman of the Convention (George W. Morris, of Kentucky,) be added to the committee to go to Washington to present the resolutions.

A Faithful Friend.

I HAVE lately seen an old horse at Bourn, in Lincolnshire, on the history of which I can thoroughly rely, and it is so remarkable that I think it worth publication. I have seen the horse myself, and as far as personal observation goes, I can thoroughly indorse the story. The horse is aged twenty-two, of the old short-legged coaching stamp, and has been in the possession of the present owner upward of sixteen years, during which period he has only had three days' rest, not excluding even Sundays. His work has been to run a heavy mail-cart from Bourn to Swayfield, a distance of fourteen miles, including the return journey, every day, and one day a week two miles extra. The horse leaves Bourn between six and seven in the morning, and reaches Bourn about seven in the evening. During his recreation at Swayfield, the horse is kept in further exercise by working at the plow and other work upon a farm. He is without blemish and in capital condition. His work for the last sixteen years has been so uniform that the horse knows the particular places he has to stop at on given days of the week; for instance, in operations stops at the barber's shop on Tuesdays and Fridays, and six days a week he stops at a draper's shop for parcels, and on Sundays he won't stop at either place. His owner is so fond of him that, with a sort of feeling of Tom Moody, he hopes that he and his horse may be buried together.—Cor. London Field.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A Texas mother was frightened to death by two dogs fighting over her twin babies.

—Representative Alexander H. Stephens once made a large fortune as a lawyer and farmer, and lost it in the effort to maintain a newspaper.

—The latest New England mob disgraced Harwinton, Conn., by trying to lynch a German offender. He escaped, and the mob vented its wrath on his horse, which they sheared, tarred and feathered.

—A Portland, Conn., young woman was nearly choked to death recently, while trying to swallow a chicken's breast whole. It lodged in her gullet, and the efforts of two doctors were necessary in relieving her.

"Shoot! shoot!" was the response of W. A. Stogner, of Polk County, Tex., to his seventeen-year-old son when the latter seized a gun and ordered the old man to cease castigating his daughter. The boy "shot," and the old man was killed.

—At DesMoines, a kitten had caught and was playing with a mouse when the frightened captive sprang into pussy's open mouth and ran down her throat. The kitten went into spasms, which did not subside till the mouse had been suffocated.

—A well-known Newport, R. I., man, who is wealthy but close, recently counted the shingles in about twenty bundles, with which he was to have his house covered, and because one bundle was short two shingles he took it back to the lumber-yard and demanded that the deficiency be made up.—Exchange.

—A St. Louis young man's chance of marrying an heiress, to whom he was engaged, was spoiled by the use of his diary as evidence in a law-suit. The record showed he frequently called on other girls, that he had been rejected by two of them since his betrothal to her, and that he had borrowed money, to be repaid when he got hold of her purse.

—A well-known aeronaut made an ascension in hot-air balloon, at Watkins, N. Y., the other day. When about 200 feet from the ground the air-ship veered off toward Seneca Lake, and when about two miles away from Watkins, came down in the water. The balloon-ist was rescued by a party who went to his assistance after he had been in the water some twenty minutes.

—A few days since at Springfield, Ohio, a woman died from some mysterious disease located in the head. The symptoms had never been manifested, but no treatment seemed to have permanent effect. After death there was an examination made, resulting in the unanimous decision that death was caused, primarily, by the use, for a long period, of chemical compounds for dyeing the hair. There is said to have been a coating formed over the brain, causing something like paralysis of that organ.

"A Night With Edison."

The following is from an article in Scribner for November, entitled "A Night with Edison":

It is at night that the great inventor is to be seen in his most characteristic aspect. He has the habits, acquired through the necessity of gaining solitude, of doing then his most important work. It is not till midnight merely that it continues; it goes on far into the small hours of the morning. Then more than ever does the business in progress, the discussion entered upon, the speculations, the news reported, take on the inspiring character that gives the ordinary matters of life a cast of puerility. It is a question of planets, of splendid forces, of essential essences. One seems to be at a point where a hand is placed upon a lever connecting with the very heart of things. The writer has had the privilege of spending one of these nights at Menlo Park and cannot fail to look upon it as a unique and memorable occasion. The combination which it certain to come of the three instruments—the phone, to transmit the message, the phonograph, to receive it, the aerophone to proclaim it aloud at any distant time or place—is discussed. We talk about the microphone, which is to sound what the microscope is to sight; about the combination proposed by Dr. Phipson of the phonograph and electroscope, by which a phonographic image is to move and seem to speak. The long building on the hill is a singular spot of energy in the lonesome country murk in repose. The electric and tree-toads are chirping in the thick darkness outside. Within, the lamps burn steadily, raising the temperature, and the machinery plods on with a patient rumble.

An apparatus in progress, of immense importance—a device for resolving sound into its constituent elements, as light is analyzed by a prism—is brought out. A gentleman of new York has already found a philological use for the phonograph in proposing to preserve with it Indian dialects, like those of the Senecas and Tuscaroras, which are ready to disappear with this generation. But this sound-prism, to call it so, if it can be perfected, opens a way for philology to reduce to a few simple formulas speech of every variety, and would render a scheme of universal language by no means chimerical. We sit down and watch the action of a carbon thermo-pile thermometer called the tremometer, which detects one-twenty-fourthousandth of a degree of rarefaction, and is capable of yet greater delicacy. The sensitiveness of the carbon, on which it is based, was discovered by accident while experimenting with it for the telephone. Thus human progress avails itself of a new discovery like a ladder. It mounts and draws up its ladder after it and mounts again.

We go to where the preparation of those carbon buttons is in progress. The material is taken from lamp-chimneys in which the wicks are trained to smoke as much as possible, and is afterward solidified by a powerful pressure. The inventor, bending solicitously among a dozen lurid lamps, ranged upon a brick fire-place overhung by a canopy, with the dark wreaths twisting about his head, has for the moment a wizard-like air. One might imagine him engaged in conjurations, summoning occult powers to his aid. But for the most part his air is as far from wizard-like as possible. As the night goes on, his hair is more than ever tumbled over his eyes, and his appearance more nonchalant. It is much after midnight now. The machinery below has ceased to rumble, and the tired hands have gone to their homes. A hasty lunch has been sent up. We are at the spectroscope. Suddenly a telegraph instrument begins to click. The inventor strikes a professional attitude, a herring in one hand and a biscuit in the other, and, with a voice a little muffled with a mouthful of bone, translates aloud slowly the sounds intelligible to him alone: "London, July —. News of death of Lord —[no, that was a bad one, according to adjusting—his affairs—and—will—continue—in business."

A late moon has risen, and we pass out upon the balcony, to which a space is fixed, and gaze—most inspiring exercise of all—at its white ver-miculated surface and the full starry heavens. It is after two in the morning. The others show fatigue, but the host is more animated than ever. It is at this time, in a reversal of conditions arising from the long night vigils, that some of his best inspirations come to him.

Bijah and the Friendless Old Man.

He seemed, at first glance, to be a poor old man—one of those you read of, now and then, as having dropped down the world and patiently waiting for the summons from the other shore. His clothes did not seem to see the feathers in his hair, the straw in his whiskers, and the dirt on his face and hands, one could not resist the conclusion that he was waiting. Sorrow seemed to weigh and be known as the boss vagrant of Detroit. He had heard of Bijah. He had heard how the old janitor opened his purse to the poor and unfortunate, and he walked up and down in front of the station, and took great pains to shiver and look cold, as he was suffering for the want of raiment. When he had played that line he halted and mournfully said:

"I'm only a poor old man,
And nobody cares for me;
I wish I could die and go to the sky,
For nobody loves me."

Here Bijah came to the door and invited him in, and he ceased his song to wipe his red eyes and reply:

"May the angels bless you for your kindness to one who has not long to stay on earth."

When he had been seated in the receiving room Bijah looked him over and kindly asked:

"Old man, are you sorrowful?"

"Very—very sorrowful, and I've got a lame back, besides," was the reply.

"And nobody seems to care for you, eh?"

"No, nobody. I'm a poor old man, without a friend on earth."

"I will be your friend," observed Bijah, after looking him over again.

"Will you? Thank Heaven! Oh! how my heart swells up!"

"Yes; I will be your friend. I will cut off your whiskers and hair, and furnish you with water and soap, and in an hour from this you'll feel like a twenty-year-old colt turned loose under a swarm of bees!"

"You'll cut off my whiskers?" shrieked the old man.

"Yes, I will."

"And wash me with common barsoap?"

"The same—the very same."

"No, you won't—I'll die first!" shouted the old man as he made for the door.

Bijah intercepted him, placed him in a chair, and by means of certain words and gestures prevailed upon him to remain there while he hunted up the shears. Th e old man begged and entreated but two clips of the shears removed whiskers and straw from his chin.

"Kill me if you wish, but don't cut my hair," begged the victim, as the shears passed its ears.

"This is only the beginning of the end," was the solemn answer, and a handful of feathers, hair, burrs, straws and autumn leaves slid down his back to the floor. In five minutes he hadn't enough hair on his head to build one end of a canary's nest, and instead of looking to be seventy years of age and ready to become an angel, he seemed a fat, healthy vagrant of about forty-five and ready for a free lunch.

"It doesn't make any difference whether you spit soap with a big 'S' or with a little one," said Bijah, as he put up the shears; "it's the medicine to help your case."

"Oh! great guns! great guns!" groaned the vag—"I do not care how soon I die!"

He was conducted to the bath-room, locked in for half an hour, and when Bijah looked in he fell back in amazement and cried out:

"Are you the same man?"

"The same, and now let me go out and be run over and killed!" grunted the old chap.

He was clean. He looked white. He had used up half a bar of soap and a barrel of water, and he couldn't play the old man business again for a year. Bijah had intended to present him with an old hat and four paper collars, but he suddenly rushed out doors, leaped into the rear of a farmer's wagon, and never ceased shaking his fist at the station house till he was out of sight.—Detroit Free Press.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Pierre Soule, grandson of the famous Louisiana Senator, died recently in New Orleans at the age of nineteen years. The family name is now extinguished.

—The wife of Jefferson Davis has been very dangerously ill. She was convalescing when the news of the death of her only remaining son by yellow fever caused a relapse which almost resulted in her death.

—Mr. W. H. Ruleson, of San Francisco, who was accidentally killed in that city a few days ago, was the author of "The Dance of Death," a book which attracted considerable attention both in this country and in England a year ago.

—The Rev. Allen McLean, who is temporarily supplying the Congregational pulpit at Litchfield, Conn., was married awhile ago, and because he did not invite some of his parishioners to the wedding they were displeased. He turned the tables on them by saying he thought a minister had as much right to choose his associates as a business man, and he wished it understood that he did not beg the privilege of preaching at Litchfield, when there were so many thousands elsewhere hungering for the gospel.

—Of Monseigneur Ashan, a distinguished Roman Catholic prelate now at one time Papal Nuncio at Brussels, who recently died, the following anecdote is related: "On his way to Rome, after he had fulfilled his mission to Brussels, his carriage was stopped by brigands. After they had pretty thoroughly rifled the persons of the prelate and his attendants, the chief asked him if he had anything more. 'Joseph,' said the Bishop, turning to his servant, 'did you give him the money that you had hidden?' alluding to $40,000 in gold which had been concealed in the bottom of a trunk amid a lot of soiled linen. The worthy man considered it a crime to lie even to a brigand."

—A correspondent of the Albany Journal relates the following incident of one of Henry Clay's visits to that State. Mr. Clay went to Kinderhook to visit Mr. Van Buren. The latter was filled with people from the surrounding country, and at a reception they were presented to Mr. Clay by Mr. Van Schaick, a prominent lawyer of the county. Among those who came to be introduced was a Miss Gray was a very beautiful young lady. It happened that just at the moment of presentation Mr. Van Schaick's memory. His hesitation embarrassed the lady. Mr. Clay, perceiving this, came instantly to her rescue by saying in his chivalrous way: "Miss Gray, there is no sort of consequence, for, judging by the young lady's looks, she will very soon change it."

Borrowed Splendor.

A Paris correspondent, writing of the parvenues that infest the gay metropolis, says: They have also done much injury, because many families imitate their luxuries without having the means to do so. There are many houses in Paris where the evening entertainments are very brilliant; but this is a borrowed splendor. The pictures which attract your eye are hired of the picture dealer, the gilt chairs and settees of the furniture dealer, the diamonds and pearls which the lady of the house wears are borrowed from the jewelers, and hardly has the last guest left the house when these costly articles must be returned to the owners. Even the fruits, the gigantic epergne and pears, which stand on the table in silver vases, are, like the vases, hired for the occasion. Not infrequently a magnificent carp is placed upon a dish, and after having excited the admiration of the guests for a few minutes it is removed. The guests are then served with little pieces of diminutive carp; but the magnificent fish, "like the baseless fabric of a vision," has vanished into thin air. It was also hired, and after playing its short part, it has returned to the dealer in delicacies. A fish cannot, of course, delight the eyes very long without offending the olfactories, but there are always in Paris fruits of a rare beauty, which during the winter season appear on the tables of numerous houses, and it may happen that a guest who has seen a pear on a table in the Rue du Richelieu during the month of January will greet the same as an old acquaintance in February on a table in some other quarter of the city. It is the old story of trying to throw dust in the eyes of the world in order to attract influential guests to the house, to marry the daughters, and to provide the sons with Government positions. This does not always work, but there are some who succeed, and the prize is well worth the struggle. But those who are unsuccessful end by ruining themselves, and when it is too late they see that Fortune runs after her favorites, but is seldom attained by those who pursue her.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and ACUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it failto cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and while families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, present, and in every case where a certain cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will all necessitate any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

Sold by SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S print stamped upon each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN F. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If any private stamp is not on each bottle, do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

VEGETINE.

I advise All who are suffering as I have suffered to give VEGETINE a trial.

MR. H. R. STEVENS, Boston, Sept. 9, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir:—I have suffered with Scrofulous Humor for many years. Physicians could give me no relief. Everything in the shape of sarsaparilla, blood elixirs, etc., did me no good. I was completely run down, and my friends thought I was in the last stages of decline. I was advised by Dr. Richardson, of this city, to try VEGETINE. I did so, and am happy to say that I am entirely cured. After taking the second bottle I felt a change for the better, and the sores began to heal up. I was thus encouraged to continue the use of VEGETINE, and am now in the enjoyment of health that I never had. I have not been sick a day since I commenced taking VEGETINE, and I have gained in flesh from 135 to 160 pounds. I have given VEGETINE a fair trial, and know what I say when I recommend it to be all that it is represented. I am a poor man, and have not the means to advertise my case, but will cheerfully answer all inquiries concerning it. Yours truly,
WM. STINKHORN, Stables, Agent, Somerville, Mass.

Dear Sir:—I write to say that seven bottles of your VEGETINE have completely cured me from a very severe case of Scrofula. I was troubled with it for years, after taking numerous remedies without any avail. I am now free from all sores, and can say that I owe my life to you. I think the VEGETINE is a splendid and reliable medicine without it. I remain, respectfully yours,

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—The quickest way to expel foul air from a well is to heat a bar of iron red-hot, and lower it down into the water; the sudden formation of steam is effectual.

—Pumpkin Pies.—Boil and strain (through colander) your pumpkin; then, to two quarts of pumpkin, two quarts of milk, four eggs, five teaspoonfuls vanilla, three of cinnamon, one of ginger, half teaspoonful ginger, half teaspoonful of mace, half a nutmeg (the spices must all be fine), add sugar and salt to taste. Bake with only under-crust.

—The credit system is a curse to everybody, and to no class is it a greater curse than to farmers. Working year after year to pay "dead horse" is the dreariest of work—it is working without hope. When a farmer looks upon his growing crops with a knowledge that they belong to his creditors and not to him—that he has already, even before the harvest has ripened, spent them, it must have the effect to make him a poorer farmer and a less efficient man generally.—Iowa State Register.

—Here is a fact for some of our housekeepers. One of the difficulties in regard to the purchase of liquid or syrup is quantity, that it so changes being due to photographic action. The same agent that alters the molecular arrangement of bodies of silver on the excited collodion plate, causes the syrup honey to assume a crystallic form. It is to this action of light that scientists attribute the working of bees by night, and why they are so careful to observe the glass windows that are sometimes placed in their hives. Is this instinct or reason?—Western Rural.

—Cure for Wounds.—As soon as the wound is inflicted get a little stick—a knife or file handle will do—and commence to tap gently on the wound. Do not stop for the hurt, but continue until it bleeds freely and becomes perfectly numb. After this point is reached you are safe—all that is necessary is to protect it from the dirt. Do not stop most of the bleeding and the numbness, and do not, on any account, close the opening with plaster. Nothing more than a little sample cream on a clean rag is necessary. We have used and seen this used on all kinds of simple punctures for thirty years, and never found a single instance of a wound becoming inflamed or under treatment as above. Among other cases, a coal-trake tooth going entirely into the thigh of a pig, several instances of fit-shank through the hands, and numberless cases of rusty nails, awls, etc., but we never knew a failure of this treatment.—Scientific American.

—Easy Boots.—Take an old pair of boots that you have done wearing, and stop up all the cracks in the uppers and lace or button holes, etc., by means of paper upon which a sufficient quantity of wax has been spread. When this has been thoroughly accomplished, oil the insides of the boots thoroughly, being sure that every part has been properly oiled. This done, mix a sufficient quantity of plaster of Paris or Portland cement, and put it inside of the same. After they have been allowed to stand for a couple of days, when the cement will be thoroughly set, take a sharp knife and cut away the leather. The casts will be complete models of the interior of the boots. Take them to a proper last-maker and order him to make you a pair of lasts to match. All you have then to do is, to give the last to your bootmaker and order him to make one or more pair, as you require. The result will be that you will find you have new boots of equal comfort to the old, the tread and fitting of the same being identical with those from which the model was taken. This is, undoubtedly, the best-known way for a wearer to secure a well-fitting boot.—Western Shoe and Leather Review.

Waste of Farm Machinery.

How many of our readers or their immediate neighbors have a plow, harrow, valuable wheat or corn-drill, wheel-rake, mowing or reaping-machine, or other valuable farm implements and machinery lying out of doors unprotected from the weather? Hundreds we will venture to say. Have any of those careless farmers ever endeavored to cipher out the actual loss such inexcusable negligence entails upon them? A mowing-machine or drills, thrashing-machine or any other piece of complicated machinery, suffers more by exposure to weather in one season than the wear and tear of putting in or harvesting half a dozen crops. The implements and machines on many farms in the western country owe 50 to 75 per cent. of their decay and breakage to the effects of weather, while 25 to 50 per cent. of their usefulness only go to benefit the owner, who has paid a high price, and probably bought them on credit bearing a heavy rate of interest.

Is it all strange that such unthrift should keep those "happy-go-lucky" farmers always in straitened circumstances? They need a guardian to save them from inevitable ruin.

It is not a reasonable excuse to allege that they have no proper place to house machinery and farm implements. Every farmer should provide a storehouse large enough to hold all of his farming tools, carts and wagons, before he expends money to them. He had far better hire the use of a drill, mowing and reaping-machines, and a thrashing-machine than to buy such costly articles without a proper building to keep them in during the ten or eleven months they are not in use.

At the season of the year every farm implement should be cleaned, oiled and carefully laid away in a dry building, where it should remain until the season arrives to use it again. Hundreds of dollars are wantonly wasted by the too prevalent practice of having exposed to the weather, plows, harrows, cultivators and other more costly machines.

A shed covered with straw or cornfodder, for storing tools under, is better than to have them lying round the fields and in fence-corners, but all such buildings leak more or less in wet weather, affording but poor protection to the tools stowed away under them.

An observant writer on this subject attributes two-thirds of the mortgages on Western farms to the loss on farm implements and machines which were bought when they could be very well done without, and, no care being bestowed upon them, they soon become utterly worthless, frequently before they are paid for. To sum the matter up in a few words: If, at first, too much debt contracted in purchasing farm machinery that could be very well dispensed with, and too little care is taken of it.

A system of wise economy is as profitable to the farmer as good crops, while carelessness keeps multitudes poor and their farms and buildings in an unclean and unsightly condition.—Kansas Farmer.

An Anger Which Bores Square Holes.

To send a verdant youngster in search of a drill wherewith to make a square hole, is one of those time-honored workshop jokes, the freshness and originality of which is perennial with succeeding generations of perpetrators. But the laugh is now over, or at least it is on the side of the victim, for, incredible as it may appear, this apparent impossibility has been accomplished, and in a way so simple and so easy that any one may prove the fact for himself. As may be supposed, the invention has excited more genuine astonishment among the mechanics gathered at the Exposition than any of the other wonders here displayed. There is a constant crowd surrounding the inventor, watching him bore hole after hole square, and puzzling over the very simplicity of the weekingly simple solution of the problem. If I had not seen the thing done, I should have refused, as many another has done before now, to put my credulity to the test, and even after the rationale is discovered it requires quite a mental effort to clear.—Paris Letter, in Scientific News.

—A party of hunters recently went out in search of game and left a dog of Luther Clark's tied at the camp. During the night a panther the animal broke loose with the chain attached to his neck. The chain caught in some rocks in a canyon, several miles from the camp, and held the dog a prisoner. When the party were about to return to the camp one of the deer hounds ran up, and catching Mr. Clark's clothing in his teeth, tried to pull him in a different direction from the deer trail. First it was supposed the dogs had brought down a deer, and the party followed the sagacious animal to find the dog that had been left behind made a prisoner. All were proud of having so intelligent an animal in their company. Had it not been for this fortunate circumstance the dog would have been starved to death.—Eureka (Nev.) Leader.

In 1850, the total property valuation of the United States, according to the census report of first year, was $7,135,780,228; in 1860, it was $16,159,616,068; in 1870, it was $30,068,518,507. That is to say, the aggregate wealth of the country increased about 125 per cent. from 1850 to 1860, and about 86 per cent. from 1860 to 1870.

Not a Beverage.

"They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hops, that is, more real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Rochester Evening Express, on Hop Bitters.

A Sudden Death.

There is something terrible in the thought of having our friends stricken down at our side, without a parting word of endearment or consolation—one moment at our side in the midst of vigorous life, cheering our hearts with their loving sympathy; the next at our feet, pale with death, deaf to our cries and heedless of our tears. Every accident or person is in instant danger of such a death. Seven-tenths of the victims of obesity die of heart disease or apoplexy. Allan's Anti-Fat, the only remedy for obesity, reduces the weight by regulating the digestion and assimilation of the food. It is perfectly harmless, and in use will insure, in every instance, a reduction of weight from two to five pounds a week.

THE SENTINEL.
CHARLEVOIX, MICH.
WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
TUESDAY, NOV. 26, 1878

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880
ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIN LETTER.

New York, Nov 20, 1878

EDITOR SENTINEL

It was a sunny year time Owen Murray, one of our Excise Commissioners quietly pocketed some $30,000 of money paid over for licenses by liquor sellers and left for parts unknown. It is needless to say that neither man nor money was ever found, and the occurrence would have been forgotten by this time but for a suit just begun by about 1,000 of the victimized saloonists to get back what they can of their money. Cochran the City, which, however, declines to hold itself responsible for their loss. So much for the Excise Department. Now comes forward the Dock Department and to show that it is not out of the fashion, comes with pride to the public mind and bookkeeper who is just discovered to be an embezzler of $15,000. As this person, however, was not wise enough to take ten times that amount and get away a safe distance from which to negotiate with the officers for a return per cent of the money or a portion of his own immunity from prosecution, he is to be severely dealt with.

The discovery of this embezzlement, smuggling as it were, is however quite a relief to us, for we hadn't had a real square defalcation before in several months. To be sure there was the Manufacturers Bank and several graves to tolerate, but we all feel the millennium has not come at hand, but New York has, through long habit, become so addicted to defalcation that nothing else can serve as a full substitute, and she becomes very uneasy if she can't have one about once in so often.

Speaking of the Manhattan and Elevated affairs, reminds me to say that in the former of these matters, which it will be remembered, was the carrying off $8,000,000 from a bank in order to obtain very little seems to be doing, the [illegible] of the two judges throwing a remarkable apathy on the subject. In both these cases, as indeed in all similar ones, the newspapers seem to be straining every nerve to aid the criminals. They pry around the various scenes of action, worm out every secret, lay bold of every obtainable scrap of information to the pleas and movements of the police, and then publish promptly every particular so that the friends involved may be fully warned of every step that is being taken inward their arrest, and accordingly.

In the Stewart matter success is pretty certain to crown the efforts of Judge Hilton and the police, in spite of the papers the announcement being authoritatively made that of grave-robbers have been "spotted" and the whereabouts of the body discovered. If this be true the arrest will doubtless be made before the readers your read this. One curious thing connected with this affair is the widespread, morbid interest which it has excited, as evinced by the enormous volume of letters which have poured in on Judge Hilton and Mr. Stewart ever since the robbery was made known. A great number of these communications coming from widely scattered points, all purport to be confessions of the crime and state that the writers either have the body or know just where it is. A still larger number are from clairvoyants, dreamers and spiritual mediums, each of which is sure that he or she has had a special vision revealing the position of the object of search. One of these says the body is buried in one corner of the graveyard in which the tomb is located; another says it is in a sub-cellar on Eleventh avenue; another says the hiding place is over on Long Island, and still another, that the remains were placed in a box and sunk in the North River. A still different class of epistles are from anonymous writers who swear at the $25,000 reward offered and say that if it is not raised to some higher figure (usually from $100,000 to $1,000,000) the body will never be found. One letter from down South some place, warns Judge Hilton that a plan is on foot to kidnap him and extort ten millions or do worse to him. Assuming that this last is a great country in which we live.

In view of the well regarded fact that a sucking and rapid build always means an epidemic of similar outrages, it would be well for those everywhere who have charge of cemeteries to exercise special vigilance for the next few months. Already dispatches from the West that the necessary desecrations are beginning to have its effect.

But I turn from the catalogue of misdeeds to less depressing subjects. Amid all the excitement and labour in regard to the search for the body of the dead, the great commercial republic known as A. T. Stewart & Co. continues its undisturbed workings. The firm are just now receiving on paper their usual large consignment, namely, the abandonment of their downtown building on City Hall Square where for years their wholesale trade has been transacted, and the consolidation of them where business in the immense structure at Fourteenth and Fourth streets, still known as Stewart's, formerly occupied.

The upward tendency of our most important business houses is simply irresistible. Take last quarter for instance, which within the memory of Pugsonds of New Yorkers was quite out of town, and which at one time during the great financial crash became a very fashionable residence locality. Years ago the business waves began to encroach upon it, and how every year of its residence character has changed, the list of the five old brown stone mansions going down to Fifth avenue ago to make way for the Methodist Book Concern's elegant building on the south side of the Square. Some of the Knickerbockers remain, the season of their beautiful sisters. The Delmonicos are a good deal like those Farrington's attempt to sweep back the Atlantic with a broom.

This state palace of the World Company I have no doubt many of your readers have wondered at and smilingly visited. Located just where the tides of Metropolitan life join pour their confluent streams from lower Broadway and fourteenth street into Union square, it is an object as prominent as it is ornamental. Within, the warerooms are simply magnificent. No city here of the workshop confusion which attends the production of the elaborate ware at the great factory up at Meriden, where over a thousand operatives are kept busy fashioning its myriad beautiful forms. Everything is quiet and sumptuous, in keeping with the rich goods which are the base ware of these cases, set off by velvet and plate glass, and which are acknowledged to be the finest made in the world. The finished metal invested by the Company is all used as the base of all their goods and which is constantly but unnecessarily sought to be imitated by other makers, both European and American, makes their the practical equivalent of solid silver, and was consequence their manufactures from more than one half the total silverware productions of the country. RAMX.

The President and the Party.

The interview with the President which appeared lately in Washington newspapers, and was telegraphed to every over the country, is regarded as very significant as indicating the disinclination that has been known as "the Southern policy," and a confession of its failure. It is manifest that a change in the temperament of the administration has taken place, and that the future relations existing between the President and his party will be different from those of the past; and that hereafter the differences in the Republican ranks will be entirely healed, and the President will enjoy the unmixed confidence of the leaders of his party from this time on.

A friend of ex-Secretary Chandler says that he asked him what he came to Washington for, and the ex-Secretary replied, "I came to go on the President's necktone, and, if he has any mind in him, now is the time he'll show it." This no doubt expresses the meaning of the conference of Mr. Chandler and Mr. Hayes which lasted the whole of Monday evening.

Another friend of Secretary Chandler expressed the same thing in a different way. He is a man in high position, and would be admitted in social circles as soon as any one. He says: "Yes, it is true that Mr. Chandler came here to appeal, if necessary, to the President that he should line up to the party with his views than he expected. And will remember now that I predict that there will in the future be perfect harmony between the President and the stalwart men of the party. You need not be surprised to see Senator Conkling at the White House when he comes to Washington. The President is dealing with nothing."

Immediately following the visit of two prominent Republicans to the White House appears an editorial utterance in the only Republican newspaper in Washington in which the President is represented to have endorsed the full acts of his cabinet to conciliate the South, and to have expressed his intention to change the men of a year ago, the people of that section. The President is represented as saying: "As one said every time the attempt to enforce the party was in a measure successful, so that it was carried out exactly, a succession of obstructionists sprung into the arena of life, which it was impossible. Of the personal and political enemies I have made in the effort, also of the consequent interruption of various schemes that had previously existed between myself and some of my supporters, I have nothing to say at present now. But it appears that the leaders always in these positions did not exert the influence to do [illegible] were unable to do so. In fact I have [illegible] to admit that the experiment of 1876 was a failure. The first one [illegible] since it was attempted, for it proved that fair dealing with the colleagues for every voter in the South, and is impossible under the existing constitution of things."

In regard to the assertion that the letters the President is represented to be speaking with reference. The interview was sent that personal [illegible] have been ordered, not only against those who have already been arrested, but against others. It is proposed to make a clean sweep of the leaders, and existing evils to be removed to the [illegible] of the people. The interests of American citizens has been grossly violated, and it must and shall be protected.

The President can be depended upon so far as election frauds and political intimidation in the Southern states are concerned, to act in such a way as will meet the approval of every honest Republican in the country.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to lay dying from one of the dangerous diseases of the kidneys, liver, stomach and bowels. The symptoms of these diseases upon the nervous system and intellect are so much like those of intemperance that many a person starving, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence for enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cornell, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results to every one. You can buy a sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are get thousands of persons who state gratefully and to Tilt and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Coughs settled on the Bronch, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 60,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives try just one bottle. It only costs 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, Geo. W. Cornell.

General News Summary.

DOMESTIC.

THREE brothers, named James, David and John Tabor, owned and operated a farm near Cheuango, N. Y. James and David disagreed as to how it should be run. A few days ago, David killed James in a fit of jealousy and then went into an adjoining wood and blew out his brains with a shot-gun.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 12th says Secty Sherman, referring to the reported withdrawal of one and two-dollar United States notes, had stated that the story was started a year ago, and caused an unnatural demand for small bills. The story was unfounded, and no order had been issued to the Printing Bureau to limit the issue of ones and twos. They were issued to everybody who demanded them, and will be kept out of circulation made for their withdrawal. After the first of January next, no bills of less denomination than five dollars can be issued by National Banks, and if the one and two-dollar United States notes were withdrawn it would make place for more silver, but, the Secretary thinks, the public at large ought to have opportion to take gold, silver or paper of any denomination, coined or printed, and that this is the best way to secure the largest circulation.

IT was stated, in Washington, on the 12th, that Lord Salisbury, in his reply to Secty Evarts, was in earnest in his position that the Canadian Fishery Award was made in accordance with the Treaty of Washington as Evarts was in maintaining the opposite view. The correspondence was not likely to be concluded before the award would become due, on the 23d, and it would probably be paid under protest.

A MEETING of the New York Clearing House, in which fifty city banks participated, was held in that city, on the 12th, to take action on the coin question in view of the resumption of specie payments on the 1st of January next. The following line of action was decided on, to take effect Jan. 1, 1879. Gold coin to be treated as full money and not to be received on special deposit; special exchange of gold checks at the Clearing House to be abolished; balances to be paid in gold or legal tenders; silver dollars received on deposit only when payment can be made in kind; silver certificates not available for the payment of balances, and dollars as well as subsidiary coins in small amounts, say under $10; special gold accounts to be discontinued.

SEC'Y SHERMAN, on the 13th, issued a circular to the effect that any person subscribing hereafter for 4-per-ct. bonds might pay for them with any of the 5-20 bonds of the act of March 3, 1865, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after the 1st of July, 1870, in the same way as if they were called at the date of subscription in regular course; but the subscription must be accompanied with a full description of such bonds, which bonds must be forwarded to the Department within thirty days thereafter, to be applied to the called bonds. Of such bonds there was outstanding, on the 13th, the amount of $29,085,750.

A TWO days' session of the National and International Commercial Convention was held recently in Chicago. A large number of illustrations from all sections of the Union were present as delegates. The Hon. George W. Morris, of Kentucky, was chosen Permanent Chairman. A series of resolutions was adopted, after lengthy discussion, declaring in favor of a grant by Congress of material aid to the Texas Pacific Railroad, and an extension of the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific; immediate promotion by Congress for ocean mail service between the Pacific ports of the United States and all important commercial points on the coast of South America; that a suitable and navigable cheap water line should be opened up between the waters of Virginia and North Carolina; that a committee be appointed to visit Washington and present the resolutions to Congress.

JUDGE MCALLISTER, formerly Judge of the Illinois Supreme Court, recently decided, at Chicago, that an indebtedness based upon "option" deals and evidenced by notes of hand cannot be collected, even though the notes be negotiable and held by innocent third parties. At that time a special dispatch stated that the body was in Judge Hilton's possession, and the thieves under arrest. The Associated Press report was to substance that the authorities had obtained no clue to its whereabouts.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

AN interchange of opinion took place among the members of the Cabinet, in Washington, the 12th, concerning the alleged violations of the Election laws, especially in Louisiana, during the recent elections, the United States Attorney for that State having furnished a list of cases showing personal influence, intimidation, etc. The sentiment of the Cabinet was that all such alleged violations should be inquired into, with a view to the punishment of the offenders.

ON the 12th, Judge Witherspoon, of the Canvassing Board of Madison County, Fla., was arrested by a Deputy United States Marshal, and held in $3,000 bail, on a charge of receiving and destroying one of the precinct returns which gave Bisbee (Rep. for Congressman) fifty-seven majority. A colored inspector in the same county had been committed to Jail charged with not doing his duty. The Canvassing Board of Alachua County were also arrested, on the same day, by a Deputy United States Marshal. It is said they had thrown out three precincts, one because the name of a voter was wrong on one of the tickets, and two, because the duplicate precinct returns did not agree. Should this action of the Board be sustained, Bisbee's majority in that county would be reduced from 550 to 97, and he would be defeated.

A CHARLESTON (S. C.) dispatch of the 12th says three managers of elections at one of the polls there had been arrested under warrants from the United States Commissioner, for obstructing a Deputy Marshal in the recent election, and refusing to patiently count the ballots. THE Hewitt Congressional Labor Committee met at Scranton, Pa., on the 14th. THE members of the National Yellow-Fever Commission left Memphis, on the night of the 15th, for Richmond, Va. Under favorable circumstances the disease might prevail in any part of the United States. From the experiences of the past, the Commission are of the opinion that the only reasonable means to keep yellow fever from this country is a strict National quarantine.

They also find that Dr. Baird had been irregular in his business methods, but not a defaulter, and they judge him not to merit deposition from the ministry. AMERICAN DISPLAY AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

Wonders of the Mechanical Department.

[From the London Times, Aug. 23.]

* * * Perhaps, however, the most important display in this department, all things considered, is that of the Waltham Watch Company, their first in the European exhibitions. The readers of the Times reports of the Philadelphia Exhibition will not need to be informed of the admirable machinery by which the works of the Waltham watches are produced, or their singular exactitude, which enables any part of a watch to be replaced by the corresponding piece of any other watch of the same grade. In this mechanical production of machines, America has long led the world, and the mechanism by which the English army rifle is still produced is with industrial institutions a contribution from the American authorities. But in the Waltham works science has been brought to the aid of native ingenuity to such a degree that even since the Philadelphia Exhibition the fabrication of watches has gone through a large are of another revolution. What was begun by applying such machines that their work was beyond competition, or anything like equal terms from any hand-work is continued by the construction of the most essential parts of a watch on a new principle, which permits an approach to exactness unattainable by the old mechanism, however practiced. Every one knows that the great difficulty in making chronometers for the use of navigators, and several lives are reported lost. The destruction in the southern portion of the Republic of San Salvador was complete, and the loss of life and property was very great. The Volcanoes of Isalco and Santa Anna were in a state of tremendous activity, and the inhabitants in the neighborhood were terribly alarmed, and many had fled to places of safety.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

WILLIE.

His eyes were brown, his cheeks were bright,
His hair hung back most from his curls;
I used to think his teeth were pearls.
I watched him with such deep delight,
My little sweetheart, Willie.

Across the school-room's din and noise
He sent me friendly smiles and looks;
He loved to carry home my books
And guard me from the rudest boys,
My kind, brave-hearted Willie.

He gave me once—I have it yet
Pressed in my dictionary leaves,
The dot, not perfume round it cleaves—
An earth-kept violet,
My thoughtful, gentle Willie.

One morn I crossed the shaded lane
Where Willie used to wait for me;
He was not there, and wonderingly
I waited long, but long in vain,
For my dear playmate, Willie.

That day, how dull the lessons were!
I watched the clock's slow, unwound heel,
While o'er its empty desk and seat
The smiling sunlight shimmered;
I missed my boy, my Willie.

And so the long, long week went by
Till some one came again to shed a word,
The saddest ever said or heard;
I could not sob, I could not cry,
My heart seemed dead with Willie.

I saw him once again. The place
Was the last I wanted. He lay at rest
With white flowers smiling on his breast.
I stooped and kissed his sweet, dead face,
And said a long good-bye to Willie.

Ah me! Ah me! How many years
Have come and gone! My own boys fret
And fill my heart; yet ever yet
My eyes have room for tender tears
For Willie as I think of Willie.

A SCALE-Y STORY.

"A Maiden" loved a maiden so,
His warlike heart was soft as "Do."

"You are of light, my only "Re."

"Ah! if but kinder you would be,
And sometimes sweetly smile on "Me."

"You are my life, my guiding star,
I love thee near, I love thee "Fa."

"My passion I cannot conceal,
You are the idol of my "Sol."

The maiden said, "Fie! ask pardon,
How can you go on so with "La."

The Major rose from bended knee,
And went her father for to "Si."

The father thought no match was finer,
This "Dal-e" and his daughter's been "a minor."

They married soon, and after that
Dwelt in ten rooms all on "one flat."

So happy ends the little tale,
For they live on the grandest scale.
—Tee Hemans.

A TALE OF TWO THANKSGIVINGS.

It was Thanksgiving-Eve. The dusk was falling fast, and something else beside the dusk, namely, a fine cold sleet, which came driving in the face in a slippery crust, and smote the face of each wayfarer with little stinging slaps, as who should say, "Forget not these, with Winter's compliments; he is just behind, and sends his card on thus by me." Thanksgiving-Eves not infrequently are of this unfortunate pattern. It may be Nature's happy device for enhancing, by contrast, the cheer and comfort of the season, making the fireside seem brighter, the dinner more tempting and savory. But how about those who have no firesides or dinners?

Jenny Forde belonged only in part to this destitute class. She had a fireside, so far as a stove with an open grate about eight inches across deserves to rank under that cozy name. Jenny was proud of her stove. She was quite sure that no one not an expert would suspect its useful qualities, or detect the handy little oven hidden away behind among the ornamental twirl and scrolls, or the place for gridirons and pudding-dishes beneath the iron cage on top. To-night she had popped on an extra lump of coal, in honor of the season, and the little room fairly glowed with warmth and that redolence of scorched blacking which is the property of little stoves all the world over. The shade was pulled down over the window, the lamp set unlit upon the table, and Jenny, in her Connecticut rocking-chair, was seated for the unwonted luxury of an idle half-hour. Later she must sow. This lazy interval was her holiday treat, the only one either her means, poor girl. There was no one to tempt to the extravagance of a Thanksgiving feast or to share it, and to spend time and money in feasting herself alone was an idea which would never have entered into her frugal and modest mind.

Yet it was not an unhappy face which the tire-glow caressed as the big rocker swung to and fro, each movement marked by a soft thud, thud, on the carpeted door. Jenny's characteristic was a round softness of form and feature, which would make her look girlish to the end of her life. Her shrewd blue eyes beamed with a kindly gleam; her mouth, though its corners showed creeping lines, trembled easily into a smile. There was a pleasant attraction in the plump little figure, always so trimly clad and neat, in the childlike fingers with their deep needle-pricks. Every body felt it, from babies who cried to come to her to the ladies who supplied her with sewing. Jenny was a favorite, and this evening—nay, this hour—was to bring proof of the fact.

For, as she sat, there came a knock at the door—a loud, important knock—and a tall form entered, impressive in capes and buttons, whom Jenny recognized as the respondent conchman of Mrs. Meredith, a gentle little widow and one of her best patrons.

"Person here named Forde—Miss Forde?" inquired the dazzling vision.

"Yes; that is me," said Jenny.

"Then he;e's for you. Compliments of Mrs. Meredith, and she hopes you'll have a pleasant Thanksgiving."

"Oh, thank you, sir; and please thank Mrs. Meredith."

With a nod he of the capes and buttons departed, leaving Jenny face to face with a big basket which he had set upon her table. From under its cover an unpiistakable drumstick protruded.

"I do wonder if it can be a turkey," thought Jenny, as she lifted the cover.

Sure enough, it was a turkey, pillowed on celery stalks and sweet-potatoes, and mounting guard, so to speak, over a mound of jellied cranberry. And what besides? A golden brown circlet, with edge of flaky white. Who can mistake a pumpkin pie? Oh, kind Mrs. Meredith!

The room seemed to have suddenly grown brighter and warmer, as Jenny, after putting away these treasures, returned to her chair and the fire. How pleasant it is to be remembered! What a happy little woman—yes, for all that had come and gone—what a happy little woman she was! So deep were her pleasant thoughts that she scarcely heard the second knock which fell on the door—a low, timid one, as from the hand of a child.

"Come in," she said, dreamily. The door opened a little way, a cold wind swept in from the threshold, and a child entered.

"Well, why don't you come in?" she called out. No one answering, she jumped up and set the door.

A little thinly-dressed girl stood in the hall. She was strangling a sob in her throat, and at the sight of Jenny seemed half inclined to run away.

"Oh, please, Miss Forde," she faltered, "would you lend mother a lump of coal? She's got one of her bad headaches—and the fire's went out—and it's so cold—and Alice and me don't know what to do." Another sob rounded the sentence like a period.

Hard-hearted as it sounds, Jenny's first impulse was to refuse. She did not know these neighbors of hers, and, "Once begin, you never know when it will stop," crossed her mind. Another look at the sweet wan face of the child changed her determination.

"Yes," she said; "come in, and I'll lend you a bit. Have you brought something to carry it in?"

"Oh, please, I'll take it in my hand." Such a mite of a hand!

"That won't do at all," cried Jenny. "My coal is all line; there are no large pieces. Here, I'll take my scuttle and throw some on your fire. You're Mrs. Denis' girl, I think?"

"Yes 'm."

So down stairs they went, and the little guide opened the door of a bare room, and revealed Mrs. Denis lying on a bed, covered with a tumbled heap of clothes, and a still smaller child sitting, with tear-glazed cheeks, beside the almost extinguished fire. The room felt alarmingly chill, and when Jenny spoke there was no reply, and the figure on the bed looked so white and motionless that her heart gave a loud thump for fear.

Hastily mending the fire, she ran up stairs, filled a saucepan with hot water of which she had been boiling potatoes, and hurrying back, began to bathe the head of the sick woman. To her great relief, Mrs. Denis presently opened her eyes, and feebly murmured. "Oh, that feels good."

"I'm glad it does. Here, I'll dip the cloth in the hot water again for you."

"Is it you, Miss Forde? It's mighty kind you are."

"Oh, it's nothing," in a business-like way. "Don't talk. Keep quite still, and your head'll be better soon."

"It begins to be better already," whispered Mrs. Denis, after a few minutes' stillness. "My headaches always go off quick at the end. But you are standing all this while. Nanny, bring a chair, Nanny."

"It don't hurt me a bit to stand," declared Jenny; "I'm used to it. Sometimes, when I'm cutting out work, I keep on my feet for half a day at a time, and never mind it."

"Ah, it must be good to have plenty of work!" sighed Mrs. Denis. "I've seen the people going up stairs with their bundles, and I'd have envied you, perhaps, only it was something to be glad for that there was some one had all she could do, even if I hadn't."

The patient sweetness of this speech touched Jenny. She could not speak quite steadily as she asked, "Have you no work at all?"

"Next to none. I did a petticoat for Mrs. Mallory—that's in the basement, you know—and I tried some of those sling overalls from Riggs. But it's a hard man he is, and only fourteen cents a pair; and what's that for a day's work? I'd take anything, though, almost, that I could get, for I want it sure for the children's sake."

"Now you must not talk—you really mustn't," said Jenny, alarmed at the flush which had risen in the pale cheeks. "Do try and go to sleep. I'll look to the children's supper. Don't worry yourself about anything, and tomorrow, when you're better, we'll talk about work, and see what can be done."

All her warm little heart was alive now.

"What a selfish thing I am!" she meditated, when, after making the children comfortable for the night, she went back to her own fire and work. "I almost refused that poor baby the coal. Jenny Forde, I'm afraid you're no better than a Pharisee. You've got into a habit of passing by on the other side—looking out for number one, and letting other people take care of themselves. You may call it minding your own business as loud as you like; I say you're a pig." And her philanthropy broadening under this self-rebuke, a bright thought just then came to her.

"Why not?" she said. "Mrs. Meredith's turkey is big enough, I'm sure. It's a burning shame that I should have so much, and they nothing. I'll ask 'em all up to dinner, and give them one nice Thanksgiving, as sure as my name is Jenny Forde."

It was like a fairy dream to the Denis children when next day Jenny came down stairs with her invitation. And what a dinner it turned out to be! What a traditionally delicious turkey! what lovely cranberry! what a pie! Ah! no one can thoroughly enjoy such a meal save those to whom dinners do not come every day. It is impossible.

During the long evening Jenny scanned the history of her new friends. It was the common story of widowhood and poverty, with one brighter feature—a sailor brother, who had been "so kind." Poor Jim! If I only could know where he is to-day!" sighed Mrs. Denis. "It's fifteen months since he sailed, and never a word all that time, Miss Forde. He left all his back wages for us—the blessed by that he is. It's his heart's bloodhe'd give me and the children if he could. And he's well off now, he'd be at this moment if it wasn't for that sorrow of a savings bank, which went and broke with all in it. He doesn't suspect the straits we're in, and it's I am glad, for he'd fret sorely, Jim would. His ship is a China trader, which means so much to little Alice's health, you see, and he's half promised the First Mate's place if he goes again. His employers think the world of him. And why not? for there's no one like Jim."

"How good turkey is!" said Nanny, who was helping the time-honored wishbone before the fire. "It's quite done, Miss Forde, I think. May I wish it now?"

"Yes. Take hold of one end, and I'll take the other. Now we must each wish. I wish your Uncle Jim would come home quick, and safe and sound."

"Why, that my wish, too!" exclaimed little Nanny, as the bone cracked and flew asunder.

But neither wish was granted. Week followed week, month succeeded month, but no Uncle Jim appeared, and hope with it by heart from. And still the friendship begun that Thanksgiving between the "fourth floor front" and the "third pair back" throve and flourished. Jenny's sewing came to do anything by halves. By her aid Mrs. Denis procured work enough to keep the wolf from the door, and innumerable were the kind offices which her helpfulness enabled her to do for the widow and her little ones. The children took her into their heart of hearts. "Aunt Jenny" was their every-hour word, and they loved her next to their mother. And strange to say, with all this added woe and new interest, Jenny's own days seemed brighter and easier than usual. "Everything turned out well" for her that year. Little bits of good fortune came her way. Her lightness of heart and satisfaction possessed her. "He that waters shall be watered." Jenny did not know it, but the truth was a real now as when in days of old angels came down in visible shape and ministered to the necessities of men.

So passed snow-time, the spring; and summer spread her mantle early over the land, and all went happily with the little hive of workers. But one afternoon in August, a sad thing happened. Jenny slipped on a bit of banana skin—one of the many bits which dot summer pavements so perfectly—and sprained her shoulder and broke her right arm. Luckily she was near home, and was carried there at once.

The accident was disposed of in three lines in next day's paper, but not so easily by the party most concerned. A long illness was followed by a weary convalescence. Sewing was out of the question; Jenny's friendly patrons were out of town; there was no one to offer help; and what with weakness and discouragement, rent falling behind, and a doctor's bill looming portentously ahead, our poor little woman felt her courage sink as never before in her life.

What could she have done without the Denises now? This was a question she asked herself a dozen times a day. Morning after morning Mrs. Denis brought her bright kind face to Jenny's bedside, made her tea, brushed her hair, straightened the room, and cheered her with the hopeful words which mean so much to the despairing invalid. Hour after hour Nanny sat, patient as an old woman, beside "Aunt Jenny," watching her eye, and ready to fly at a moment's notice to any call needed. Even little Alice would climb the stairs with a glass of "real cold" water, a flower, a kiss to make her well, or a new rhyme culled from her picture-book, which she was sure would "smooth" the dear neighbor. These visits were the sole cheer of those dark days. The little seed sown in kindness and indeed brought forth fruit a hundredfold.

"Sure and it's a pleasure you wouldn't deny me," Mrs. Denis would protest in answer to Jenny's tearful thanks. "It's always been you and you before, and I never thought I'd have the chance to so much as turn my hand over for you. It's clear pleasure, it is."

The "clear pleasure" lasted into October; then matters began to mend. Jenny could help herself a little at last. Her employers came back, and various little kindnesses followed their return. But the once nimble fingers were stiff and weak, and Thanksgiving found her still unable to sew for more than a few minutes at a time. Mrs. Meredith was in Europe; no one happened to think of the little seamstress, and altogether things were in sorry contrast to the bright holiday of last year.

Again Jenny sat in her rocking-chair on Thanksgiving-Eve, idle now from necessity, not of choice. She looked sad, but brightened when Mrs. Denis' step sounded on the stair. It was a quick, glad step, and Mrs. Denis burst in with the joyful face of a bearer of good tidings.

"Oh, Jenny!" she panted, "never was anything like it! It's a turkey has come to me myself this time! Mrs. Read sent it, for the darling she is!—an elegant turkey, and an elegant heap of potatoes as well. We'll have our thanksgiving after all; and if you're agreed, we'll eat it up here, for my room's but a cold one, and I daren't risk you to come down."

"How nice! how pleasant! But how very kind of you!" said Jenny, half crying.

"Kind! Why, yourself did it, you know. It's you last year, and me this, that's all."

It was impossible to resist such openhearted gladness, and the feast proved even merrier than that memorable one of a year ago. Jenny

THE REPRESENTATIVE CANVAS The official canvas of the votes cast for Representative in this district gives Pailthorp (Dem.) a plurality of 76 over Wood, "on the face of the returns"

But it seems that Mr. Pailthorp is not to be allowed to take his seat at Lansing without defending his title at the bar of the House of Representatives

Alleged irregularities in the vote of certain Townships in Maddon county is the reason for contesting the seat.

We have authority for stating that Mr. Wood has availed himself of eminent counsel, and proposes to contest the seat with every means at his command

Our reporter interviewed Mr. Pailthorp on Saturday, and drew from that gentleman the statement that he should exhaust every resource in his power to defend his right to the position to which he has been elected. In short, he proposed to "take his seat unless balkered out of it."

What the outcome will be of this affair, we cannot predict. If the points of illegality are well taken, Mr. Wood has the advantage of belonging to the party of the majority in the House which is more likely to seat its claimants than that of the minority, while on the other hand, Mr. Pailthorp can bring to his aid friends of influence, who will seat him if such a thing is possible.

The New Orleans Times wouldn't wonder at a Grant revival if the Democrats are not very careful in their legislation between now and 1880

—Early in the summer thousands of the irredeemable or fiat currency men, it is said, subscribed for the New York Advocate, which they were promised for 25 cents a year. They were notified by reputable newspapers the no such weekly paper could be afforded for that price, and warned to beware of fraud. But they thought they knew better, and put in their quarters. After a while it ceased to come, and some of them blamed the Postoffice, or charged it to the republicans. But the postmaster at Jackson has inquired of the superintendent of the mailing department at the New York Postoffice, and in reply is informed that the Advocate has not been mailed since the 19th of October. But the "fiat" subscribers have one resource left. They can write on a piece of paper, 'This is the Advocate," and real that till their subscription expires. It will be just as valuable so far as sound financial information is concerned.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo N. Y., the proprietor of Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, and also of the invalids' and Tourists' Hotel, of that city has recently been elected to Congress by the very flattering majority of nearly 3,000. He has already served his constituency as State Senator, and his renewed endorsement signifies that his services have been highly satisfactory.

Specie resumption has virtually taken place already in New York. The bold stand which our country took in the last election against fiat currency has virtually settled the resumption question, and henceforth it is a settled fact that a paper dollar is worth no more nor less than a gold dollar. Wall St. bankers are refusing to give special certificates on gold and no premium is offered. Our green-back dollar to-day is worth one hundred cents.

Secretary Sherman's Report.

A summary of the report of Secretary Sherman is here given:

THE REVENUES.

The ordinary revenues from all sources for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, were $257,763,878.70. The ordinary expenditures for the same period were $236,964,220.80, leaving a surplus revenue of $20,799,657.90, which was applied to the redemption of United States notes, the redemption of fractional currency, the increase of the sinking fund and the augmentation of the cash balance in the Treasury. The deficiency in the sinking fund for the year was $14,628,440.00. The net decrease of receipts for the year was $11,420,107.92, and the net decrease in expenditures $1,890,682.12, as compared with the preceding fiscal year. The actual receipts for the first quarter of this year were $73,-990,723.48, and the estimated receipts for the remaining three quarters, $191,100,276.82. The actual expenditures for the first quarter were $73,-344,578.27, and the estimated expenditures for the remaining three quarters $196,795,420.73, or a total of receipts for the year, of $264,500,000, and of expenditures $340,100,000, leaving a balance of $24,400,000, applicable to the sinking fund, which is estimated for the year at $30,164,-607.97. The estimates for the fiscal year 1880 are, receipts $264,500,000, expenditures, leaving sinking fund, $273,197,995.04, showing an estimated deficit of $10,697,995.04, excluding the sinking fund there will be an estimated surplus of $28,166,087.93. These estimates are based on the Congressional appropriations of the present year.

The estimate of revenue, based upon existing law, the Secretary says, is $9,000,124 more than the actual revenue of the past year. This increase can only be realized by rigid and impartial enforcement of the revenue laws. This is not only a legal duty of revenue officers, but is the right of every honest tax payer. The enforcement of the tax on spirits and tobacco has, in some cases, been resisted by formidable combinations too powerful for the Department, with forces at its command, to overcome. The customs duties, in many cases, have been evaded by smuggling, fraud, undervaluation, and false claims for drawback and drainage allowance. Some of these frauds are incident to the execution of any tax law, and some of them, the experience by modification of the laws, as Mr Sherman suggests.

SPECIE REDEMPTION.

In regard to the resumption of specie payments, the Secretary says he has substantially carried in to execution those provisions of the act of 1875 by the gradual substitution of fractional coin for fractional currency, the increase of gold in the Treasury, and by free banking. There remains only the completion of the resumption act by the sale of bonds on the 1st day of January, 1879, and the maintenance thereafter of specie redemption. The objects of the Secretary has been to accumulate a coin reserve of $138,000,000 and that being the smallest reserve upon which resumption could safely be commenced, and the amount of coin held in the Treasury, on the 29th inst. of $133,000,000, was sufficient to pay all our liabilities, was $141,888,180, and was accumulated for the purpose of resumption only. This coin would be distributed somewhere, on the 1st of January next by the increase in the amount of national currency for circulation in excess of the coin reserve. Should the banks, from any cause, refuse to redeem in coin their own notes, the Secretary recommends that the Department be authorized to issue certificates of deposit of the United States of the denomination of $10, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum and convertible at any time within one year after they leave the Department, bonds authorized by the refunding act, and to be used only in exchange for United States notes sent to the Treasury by mail or otherwise. Such a provision of law, supported by sufficient regulations, would enable any person desiring, without cost or risk, to convert his notes into an interest bearing security of the United States, and the money so received could be applied to the redemption of the 3 per cent. bonds.

NATIONAL BANKS.

On the 1st of October, the number of National Banks in existence was 2,053. The amount of their circulating notes outstanding, including those in liquidation, was $323,147,710; the capital invested was $460,147,400; the surplus fund on profits was $107,863,012; the loans and discounts were $609,021,342

COINAGE.

The value of the gold coinage executed during the last fiscal year $93,708,980 00
Of trade dollars 11,078,010 00
Of standard silver dollars 8,673,560 00
Of fractional silver coin 8,380,215 50
And of minor coin 30,004 00

A total coinage of $81,120,490 50

In addition to the coinage, fine and unparted bars were prepared for deposit in the Mint to the value of $12,501,926 23 in gold, and $11,854,368 87 in silver.

The amount of gold coin and bullion in the country was $430,780,245 30, reduced by the bullion of the Mint at $250,265,320, and of silver coin and bullion at $95,080,587 - a total of $358,443,917.

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING BUREAU.

At the close of the last fiscal year there was an unexpended balance of $622,836.17 of the appropriation for labor and other expenses of this bureau. Of this amount, in accordance with the act approved June 20, 1878, the sum of $127,750.00 will be expended in the purchase of a site for and the erection of a fire-proof building for the bureau, the work on which is now progressing satisfactorily, and will probably be completed during the fall of 1879. It is assumed, from action of Congress at its last session, that it holds that the engraving and printing of the public securities can be more cheaply, perfectly and safely done in this bureau than in jet other establishments, and the Secretary has therefore, directed that all work of this description as to certain proprietary stamps, shall be done therein. The cost of the work is less than one half the price previously paid.

STAMPS.

The Secretary calls the attention of Congress to the necessity of some legislation as to the adjustment of claims which may arise where the portfolio of the Department. While the Department is always careful to provide a safe investment, and to secure the uniformity and correctness of current issues, it is not assured to the exemption of old and disputed claims of a different character. For the proper investigation of such claims the methods adopted in all our courts for ascertaining by truth or misbehaving are best. For the purpose a tribunal, which will require the best evidence of which the nature of case will permit, the production of original papers rather than pretended copies, the presence of the parties before the officers taking testimony, the cross-examination of witnesses by the opposite party, and the argument of the case before a competent officer, provides that after Jan. 1, and while United States notes are redeemed at the Treasury, that they be received the same as coin by the officers of the Department at all payments in all parts of the United States.

THE SILVER DOLLAR.

The Secretary discusses at considerable length the silver dollar, and says it was not to supersede the gold dollar, but did Congress propose to adopt the single standard of silver, but only to create a bimetallic standard of silver and gold, of equal value and equal purchasing power. Congress, therefore, limited the amount of dollars to be coined to not less than two millions nor more than four millions per month, but did not limit the aggregate amount for the period of time during which the coinage should continue. The market value of the silver in the dollar, at the date of the passage of the act, was 89¼ cents to gold coin. Now it is about 81 cents in gold coin. If it was intended by Congress to adopt the silver instead of the gold standard the amount coined would be totally inadequate for its purposes. Experience, not only in the country, but in European countries, has established that a certain amount of silver coin may be maintained in circulation on a par with gold, though of less intrinsic bullion value. It was, no doubt, the intention of Congress to provide a coin in which the world assumes a multiple of the purposes of barter, the ready handling from circulation the more valuable gold coin of the country. To accomplish this end a sufficient amount, but no more than is required in amount, or not its bullion value be equal to that of the gold dollar. It can, therefore, be limited in domestic purposes. It cannot be exported except at a loss, and cannot be profitably coined in excess of demands for domestic purposes. It will necessarily fall to the market value, and, by a well-known principle of finance, will be either hoarded or exported. When two currencies are in circulation, the cheaper will be the cheaper alone will circulate. If, however, the legal value of the silver dollar is limited to an amount demanded for circulation, there will be no depreciation, and the silver dollar will keep itself at par with gold, as fractional silver coin issued under the act approved Feb. 21, 1853, was kept at par with gold.

The Secretary concludes that it would be the best policy for the present to limit the aggregate issue of the silver dollar to the amount now in circulation to one, to such sums as can clearly be maintained at par with gold, and the price of silver in the market shall assume a decided ratio to gold, when the limit should be enlarged, and one made to conform to it, and take that to be a guarantee to discontinue the coinage of the silver dollar when the amount outstanding shall exceed $50,000,000. He states that he is opposed to the redeem all United States notes in sums of not less than $50, either in gold or silver coin, as desired by the holder, but leaving the legal option of the Government to pay or refund United States notes for all other denominations on the Treasurer, except when demanded on coin for silver.

FOUR PER CENT BONDS.

During the present year, prior to Nov. 23, $100,-750,000 of 6 per cent. bonds had been sold at 4 per cent. bonds of an equal amount refunded, or will be redeemed as the calls mature. From the best advice, only $250,000,000 of United States bonds are held abroad, it might be fairly anticipated that the sale of the 4 per cents. would largely increase. In order to avoid the payment of double interest on the two kinds of bonds, as well as the temporary contraction of the currency, the Secretary recommends that the notice of redemption for called bonds be, at his discretion, given for less than ten days, nor more than three months. In order that the freest opportunity may be given to invest in the public securities, the Secretary recommends that the Department be authorized to issue certificates of deposit of the United States of the denomination of $10, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum and convertible at any time within one year after they leave the Department, bonds authorized by the refunding act, and to be used only in exchange for United States notes sent to the Treasury by mail or otherwise. Such a provision of law, supported by sufficient regulations, would enable any person desiring, without cost or risk, to convert his notes into an interest bearing security of the United States, and the money so received could be applied to the redemption of the 3 per cent. bonds.

NATIONAL BANKS.

On the 1st of October, the number of National Banks in existence was 2,053. The amount of their circulating notes outstanding, including those in liquidation, was $323,147,710; the capital invested was $460,147,400; the surplus fund on profits was $107,863,012; the loans and discounts were $609,021,342

Operations of the United States Light-house Board.

The annual report of the United States Light-house Board, for the year ending on the 30th of June, states that the numerous establishments, maintained for the protection of the principal harbors of commerce, 1,336 lights (including 436 on the western rivers), 471 day beacons, 55 fog signals, operated by steam or first-class engines, and 3,067 buoys. The board, having in view the necessity of keeping the estimates down to the lowest figures, has recommended no new works which can be safely and judiciously deferred to a future period. Those that are asked for are deemed to be needful to the public interest. Other estimates are made an appropriation for the commencement of a lighthouse at Spanish Key, Florida Reefs. As all this lighthouse will be commenced at an early day, an additional appropriation is required to carry on the work this year. The building of this structure will complete, for the dangerous reefs of Florida, a system of lights that was recommended in the early days of the lighthouse board. An appropriation of $50,000 is asked to begin the work of a ship canal through the sandspit at the mouth of Mississippi River. A small appropriation is asked for the improvement of Galveston harbor, Texas, and the completion of the breakwater at Port Isabel. This work should be completed at an early day. An appropriation of $3,000 is asked for the purpose of making an addition to the buildings in which the Light-house Board meets, and which are erected under the auspices of the Light-house Board. The present number of employes cannot be increased, as the duties of the Board are already performed in the most economical manner possible. Besides, the efforts to secure economy in supplanting the old lens of the present system by one of more modern and improved construction, which can be manufactured at much less cost, and which will require a smaller number of renovations, and the consequent reduction of the number of keepers, will necessitate the enforcement of the law on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, which requires that the service thereafter shall be performed by steam or hot steamless, and that the number of keepers employed in the service shall be reduced to single one to give the warning at the proper time when danger is apprehended, and to keep the lights all in regular for years. An increased appropriation is also asked for the purpose of enabling the Board to keep pace with the progress of the times and to meet the increased demands upon its limited ability in the direction of the improvement of the coast and of our Indian policy cannot be promoted wholly unconnected among the Indians the talk in the said economy of the Government. Any change in the policy of the Indian bureau, by enforcing the policy of building up the Indian, and the change should be agreed to by the Indian, the change must necessarily be in that direction. Such a change should be effected by the consent of the Indians, and should be accompanied by the assertion that the Government has the right to enforce its decisions. Publicity in send out hunting parties has been given to the fact that the Indians would have been exposed to want.

An additional force will be required on the several reservations has been ordered and is in progress. The facilities of transportation are extended as much as possible, and proper discipline secured. The total at the close of the year was 6,000 light-houses, 830 day-lights, 22 light-ships, 2 screw fog-signals, 471 day beacons and 3,062 buoys.

THE MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

During the year 18,229 sick and disabled seamen were cared for during the year ended June 30, 1878—the number exceeding by 1,416 the largest number relieved in any previous year. As in the preceding year, there was again a small surplus of receipts over expenditures, or rather by the agreement of the Register of the Treasury, the receipts covered into the Treasury being $393,678 97
And the expenditures 393,292 80

Leaving unexpended $1,385 77

The Secretary concludes by commending the conduct of the officers of its Department.

Report of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his annual report, refers to his recommendation of last year to repeal to the bullion, and says:

The consolidation of a number of agencies has been effected, and the number of Indian tribes within the Indians, which will at the same time make more efficient the supervision over them, reduce the expenses of the Government, and lessen the opportunities for fraud and speculation. As far as the appropriations made by Congress would permit, additional buildings have been erected for Indians have been furnished to the Indian tribes to enable them to raise their own subsistence, and to encourage industrious habits. An in-thus policy has called attention to the question of the support of all of them favorable reports as to the working of the system have been received.

Instructions have been given to discriminate in the distribution of supplies as to Indians who are not actual necessities against individual Indians who refuse to work, and against those who are exercising influence. Permission to send out hunting parties has been given to the Indians, and the Indians would have been exposed to want.

An additional force will be required on the several reservations has been ordered and is in progress. The facilities of transportation are extended as much as possible, and proper discipline secured. The total at the close of the year was 6,000 light-houses, 830 day-lights, 22 light-ships, 2 screw fog-signals, 471 day beacons and 3,062 buoys.

Report of the Secretary of War.

The report of the Secretary of War is a lengthy document, filled chiefly with details of the business of the latter years of the Rebellion. The Secretary says:

The appropriations for the support of the Army, the enlisted men in the Military Service Academy at West Point, for the fiscal year ending the fiscal year was $16,076, including $38 less than the estimate submitted by the Secretary of War. The appropriation for the improvement, the Secretary says the crime of the Indians is the result of the system of issuing rations of ordinary supplies. The Secretary also says that the policy of the Government toward title indicates a Universal Union, regulating, upon a uniform basis of cheap postage-rates, the mail matter between all civilized Nations.

Some embarrassment has arisen out of the conflict between the treaties and laws of this country and the provisions of the Postal Convention. In regard to the transmission of foreign books and newspapers to the citizens by mail. It is hoped that Congress will be able to reconcile some terms of reconciling the difficulties which have thus been created, so as to do justice to all parties involved.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The business of the Supreme Court and of the circuit courts of the circuits has increased to such an extent in the past years that additional legislation is imperative to relieve and prevent the delay of justice, and possible oppression to suitors, which is thus occasioned. The causes and condition of these docket are presented anew in the report of the Attorney-General, and the remedy suggested is earnestly urged by Congress at an early day. The creation of additional Circuit Judges, as proposed, would afford a complete remedy, and would involve an expense at the present rate of salaries of not more than $70,000 a year.

THE INDIANS.

The annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, present an elaborate account of the present condition of the Indian tribes and of that branch of the public service which ministers to their interests. While the consent of the Indians, generally, has been orderly, and their relations with them peaceful and powerful, no local disturbances have occurred, which were deplorable in their character, but repressed, happily, conducted to comparatively small number of Indians. The disaffection among the Bannacks, which led to the murder of the tribe and death to the outbreak, appears to have been caused by an insufficiency of food on the reservation and the indifference to treachery owing to the inadequacy of the appropriation for their support. So, also, the wants of the Indians, as a tribe, when the Indians were persuaded from supplying the difficulty by hunting. Only an authentic pursuit by the troops of the United States, and several engagements, the hostile Indians were reduced to submission, and the more part of them surrendered themselves as prisoners. To this connection, I desire to call attention to the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Interior, that a sufficient fund be placed at the disposal of the Executive to be used, with proper accountability, at discretion, in subduing outbreaks of the Indian tribes.

The other case of disturbance was that of a band of Northern Cheyenne, who suddenly left their reservation in the Indian Territory, and marched rapidly through the Central Kansas and Nebraska in the direction of their old hunting-grounds, committing murders and other crimes on their way. From documents accompanying the report of the Secretary of the Interior, it appears that this disorderly band was so fully supplied with the necessaries of life as the 1,241 other Indians who remained quietly on the reservation, and that the disturbance was caused by acts of a few reckless and mischievous disposition among the Indians themselves. Almost the whole of this band have surrendered to the Indian authorities, and it is a gratifying fact that when some of them had taken to the war-path, they refused to murder helpless women and children, and spared the lives of those who fell into their hands.

But, while the employment of force for the prevention or repression of Indian troubles is of occasional necessity, and while provision should be made to that end, greater reliance must be placed on humane and civilizing agencies for the ultimate solution of what is called the Indian problem. It now be very difficult, and require much guile of effort, to check the unruly spirit of the savage Indian in the fascinations of civilized life, but experience shows that it is not impossible. Many of the tribes which are quiet and orderly and self-supporting were once as savage as any that at present roam over the plains or in the mountains of the far West, and were then considered to present the most untractable material. It may be possible to raise them fully up to the level of the white man in the United States; but we should not forget that they are the aborigines of the country, and that the soil under our feet, on which our people have grown rich, powerful and happy. We owe it to them as a moral duty, and help them in attaining at least that degree of civilization which they may be able to reach. It is not only our duty to be also our interest to do so. Indians who have become agriculturists or herdsmen and feel an interest in property, will thereby forth cease to be a warlike and plundering element. It is also a well-ascertained fact that Indians are apt to be peaceable and quiet when their children are at school, and I am gratified to know, from the reports, that more families and more children are now going to schools, that there is a steadily increasing desire among Indians belonging to organized tribes, to have their children educated. Much attention in the report of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, touching the experiment, recently inaugurated, in basing fifty Indian children, boys and girls, from different tribes to the Hampton Normal Agricultural Institute in Virginia, where they are to receive an elementary English education and training in agriculture and mechanic work, to be returned to their tribes, after the completed course, as instructors, instructors and examples. It is reported that the officer charged with the selection of these children might have had thousands of applications from parents who were anxious to secure to make provision for them. I agree with the Secretary of the Interior in saying that "the result of this interesting experiment, if favorable, may be destined to become an important factor in the advancement of civilization amongst the Indians."

The question, whether a change in the control of the Indian Service should be made, was, at the last session of Congress, referred to a committee for inquiry and report. Without desiring to anticipate that report, I venture to express the hope that in the future no important question, therefore expressed slavery may not be lost sight of, and that the decision, whatever it may be, will arrest further agitation of this subject, such agitation being apt to produce a disturbing effect upon the service as well as on the Indians themselves.

NOT ANNUAL, BUT PERMANENT.

In the enrollment of the bill making appropriations for annual civil expenses, at the last session of Congress, that portion which provided for the continuance of the Hot Springs Commission was omitted. As the commission had completed the work of taking testimony for the many conflicting claims, the simple action of their labors, but provision was made for the disbursement of the fund in connection with the report, in a system of the work and to demand its prompt and judicial hearing of claims which have been presented. As the library is National in its character, and must, from the nature of the case, increase from year to year, and in future than in the past, it cannot be doubted that the Government will continue to make appropriations to preserve it and to enlarge its usefulness.

SMITHSONIAN LEGACY FUND.

The appeal of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution for an appropriation to pay a claim and make available for the public benefit the articles of a privilege the future application of the Government. I heartily recommend to favorable consideration.

WASHINGTON RIVER FRONT.

The situation of the water front is most limited in favor front of the City of Washington. It is a most serious embarrassment to the growth of the city and denies of the National capital both conveyance and transportation for the large supplies of fuel and other articles which are necessary for its people. The subject is respectfully submitted to the consideration of Congress, especially as the improvement will improve the navigation of the river by confining and concentrating scouring its channel, and is also of importance, when considered in connection with the extension of the public ground and the further improvement of the park west and south of the Washington Monument. The report of the Board of Survey heretofore ordered by act of Congress, on the improvement of the flats of Washington and Georgetown, is respectfully recommended to consideration.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia presents a detailed statement of the affairs of the District.

The relative expenditures by the United States and by the District for local purposes is contrasted, showing that the expenditures by the people of the District greatly exceed those of the General Government. The exhibit is made in connection with estimates for the regular repair of the streets, repairs of the sewers of the city which is a work of immediate necessity, and, in the same connection, a plan is presented for the permanent funding of the outstanding securities of the District.

The benevolent, reformatory and penal institutions of the District are all entitled to the favorable attention of Congress. The Reform School needs additional buildings and teachers. Appropriations which will place all of these institutions in a condition to become models of usefulness and efficiency, will be regarded by the country as liberality wisely bestowed.

The Commissioners, with evident justice, request attention to the discrimination made by Congress against the District in the matter of the grant for the support of the public schools, and ask that the appropriation may thereafter be equal to the inhabitants of the various States and Territories of the United States, may be extended to the District of Columbia.

The United States Commissioners also invite attention to the damage inflicted upon public and private interests by the present condition of the slopes and approaching tracks of the several railroads entering the city, and ask for legislation looking to their removal. The recommendations and suggestions contained in the report will, I trust, receive the careful consideration of Congress.

Sufficient time has, perhaps, not elapsed since the reorganization of the Government of the District, under the present form of government, for the expression of a confident opinion as to its successful operation; but the general features already exhibited are satisfactory that the friends of the measure have no reason to regret that Congress the wisdom of its readjustment without essential change, and with every confidence in its ultimate success and deserts may be more fully developed.

R. B. HAYES.

Executive Mansion, December 2, 1878.

The United States Treasurer's Report.

The annual report of United States Treasurer Hillhouse to the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the total resources in the Treasury of the United on Sept. 30, 1878, $1,864,624,472.38, in 1877, $2,141,141,125, in 1876, $1,724,964,14

He says the coin resources have steadily increased since 1861, $457,000,000 on the above date in 1878, to $122,580,172.21 in 1877, and to $206,887,374.60 in 1878, that there has been little change in the currency assets, except that they were larger in amount than on the above date in 1877, on account of the failure of the appropriation for the Mint and Assay Establishment to the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, which made necessary the withholding of certain to meet branch of the service until the succeeding session of the Forty-fifth Congress, which convened in special session on October, 1877. The total amount of unavailable assets carried in the balance of the account stood in the Treasurer's office was $2,042,911 less in 1878 than in 1877.

Under the operation of the Resumption act of 1875, providing for the redemption of fractional notes equal to 50 per cent of National Bank notes issued, the aggregate amount retired from 1876 to 1878 was $36,318,981. At the time of the passage of the act, May, 1878, forbidding the reissue or reinvestment of legal-tender notes, action under the former act ceased, leaving the amount of legal-tender notes outstanding at the time $346,681,016, at which volume they remain. The amount of gold coin surrendered in exchange notes in circular on June 30, 1877, was $39,232,760 and was $81,011,125, respectively. The retirement of United States certificates during the fiscal year of 1878 was $44,1883,310.

The act of Congress of Feb 28, 1878, required the coinage of silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains Troy, of standard silver. The first coinage under this act were ordered at the office from the mint in March, 1878, and the order expanded with the public to gold coin. The amount so executed and issued from the mint and other offices was $17,1882,957. The total amount of standard silver dollars coined under the above act to date is $19,289,501 of which amount there is in the mint and other $13,1880,877, and in circulation, $5,408,623. The largest payments in silver coin have been made at New York and San Francisco, but the coins issued at those points immediately find their way back to the Treasury vaults, either as receipts from customs, or as deposits on account of silver certificates, or in payment of subscriptions to the 4-percent loan. Treasurer Hillhouse states that on the 31 last there were $14,1880,877 of these coins on hand, and $4,1822,023 outstanding. The aggregate amount sent to the depositary and other banks is $9,1818,953.

The third section of the act above mentioned authorized the issue of silver certificates, which were, upon the passage of the act, redeemable in coin at this office, and at the office of the Assistant Treasurers in New York and San Francisco, in denominations of from $10 to $1,000. The total amount issued to date is $8,570,780 at Washington, $401,800 at New York, $210,000 and at San Francisco $7,768,980. There is, however, in circulation only $1,021,880, the remainder having been paid into the Treasury through the Custom Houses, and not reissued. The certificates issued at San Francisco cannot their way at once to the New York Custom House.

The suspension of coinage of silver coin for fractional currency has been in progress during the year, though with the exception of the March the amount of fractional currency redeemed was less than in 1877. $1,041,011.16. On the contrary, however, $1,118,855.11 during the present year was redeemed in United States notes. The total amount of fractional currency redeemed under the operation of the act of resumption approved April 17, 1875, to the 30 1878, was $23,787,264. Since April 18, 1878 there has been issued of fractional silver coin $20,728,101, and of the coinage for the same period $20,728,101, leaving there is still a deficit, which is supplied from the stock on hand in the office and at the various which together with that in other offices, amount at this time to $6,1882,000. The amount paid out since June 30 1877, to date, is $9,542,000. In payment of fractional silver paid out at the several offices of the Treasury from April 18, 1878, to this 31, 1878, amounted to $8,728,100.

The outstanding circulation of the National Banks at the close of the fiscal year was $321,514,264. The cost of redemption, which comes direct upon this amount, was considerably less than one-tenth of per cent, or less than $30 per annum for a bank of average circulation. Of $211,784,137.50, in bank notes received for redemption $80,677,161 or 38.26 percent, was received from the City of Boston and Philadelphia, or 31.18 per cent. from the City of New York, nearly 70 per cent of the entire redemptions for the year received from these two cities.

There was $7,214,000 of National Bank notes therefore, assorted and cancelled by the Treasurer and Assistant Treasurers during the fiscal year, which was $1,1880,000 less than the previous year. The total cost of collecting National Revenue in the United States during the year ending June 30 1878, was $1,076,911, being less than 3½ per cent. of the total amount collected. The Commissioner claims that the reasons for the present low rate of collection are to be found in the abolition of a number of unnecessary offices.

The report contains a statement showing the receipts from the several objects of taxation for the first four months of the present fiscal year, as compared with the same period of the last fiscal year. This shows a decrease of $386,133 on spirits, an increase of $272,240 on tobacco, an increase of $226,240 on fermented liquors, a decrease of $24,821 on banks and bankers, an increase of $14,736 on adhesive stamps, a decrease of $16,144 in the amount of penalties, and a decrease of $10,041 in the amount received for taxes on articles and exemptions formerly taxed but now exempt. The net increase of revenue has, therefore, been $346,427.

Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in his annual report states that the heavy falling off in the receipts from internal revenue, as compared with marks it for closing months of the past fiscal year has ceased, and that the receipts for the current fiscal year have thus far shown an increase. He is also pleased to state that a majority of the States the internal-revenue laws have been enforced with less than ordinary difficulty or opposition. There has been a commendable spirit exhibited on the part of the people generally to observe the law and to withhold from the use and to believed that the tax on distilled spirits will be paid with less friction than for many years. The Commissioner calls attention to the unsatisfactory condition of the law relating to the compromise of criminal cases, and recommends that the power of the solicitor should not be granted. And it is further proposed, that said power be given to the person interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

The Mariner's Cautionary Signal.

The cautionary signals for shipping are upon the coast, seaboard, or lake, and in view of the mariner. Each is under the charge of a Sergeant and assistant, whose duty may be described as picked of morning on the fringe of the country. The observations from the observing stations having converged upon Washington, and the general and special predictions arrived at, the announcements radiate from the central office—the brain—along the wires, or across, to the remotest digits upon the signal halyards.

When, as is sometimes the case, the signal station is placed in the Life-Saving Service Station, a further advantage is gained, as the two work well together, and the Life-Saving Service has the benefit of the wires of the sister enterprise.

The cautionary signal of the United States Signal Service is a square red flag with a black square in the center by day; a red light is used by night. The flags are of two sizes—10x15 feet and 8x6 feet, the black square being one-ninth of the area of the flag. The larger flag is used for important stations, about ten in number, and the smaller flag for the other stations.

The stations on the Atlantic are from Atlanta, Texas, and on the lakes from Oswego to Duluth. The number of stations on the Atlantic proper is twenty-four, counting Key West; and on the Gulf of Mexico, six, omitting Key West, already enumerated. The lakes have fifteen stations. Warning notices are sent by telegraph to the Canadian Meteorological Service when any disturbance occurs which is likely to affect them, and is distributed to the points interested.

The purport of the signal is this: "A wind having a velocity of twenty-five miles an hour may shortly be expected at this place."

That is all that the flag professes to say; the probable excess over twenty-five miles an hour, and the direction of the wind, are not given by the flag. The time may shortly arrive when, by an extension of the system, the additional data, such as "severe storm expected," may be embodied in the signal; but at present the notice is just what it is called and professes to be—"cautionary." It is then the duty of the mariner, shipper or whoever else is interested, to consult the weather report for further information, and to make frequent examinations of local barometers and other instruments, and study the local signs of the weather.—E. H. Knight, in Harper's Magazine for December.

Relationships of Birds and Reptiles.

We have now passed in review various remarkable forms—living birds and living reptiles, incorporated by an innumerable distance from each other, and forms which have so mingled the characters of both as to present great difficulties to their being included among the members of either group. Starting from the crocodile of morning-glory vines, where the locusts were singing, and the pink and purple cups swung to and fro in the morning wind.

And Polly, with crimsoned cheeks and heart beating with vague resentful, hurried look into the great sunshiny kitchen, where Lisbeth was swaying nervously to and fro in the splint-bottomed rocker, with a week-old newspaper in her hand, her yellow hair catching the sunbeams like a coronal of gold as she rocked.

"Lisbeth," said the elder sister, austerely, "are the wild grapes ready for preserving?"

"Wild grapes?" repeated Lisbeth, flinging the newspaper into the window-seat; "I haven't thought of them since you went away. Oh, Polly, how I wish we were rich!"

Polly advanced soberly to a fine wicker tray of clustered grapes, full of sunlit perfume, and dusted over with pale purple bloom, and began to separate them from their stems with deft, quick fingers.

"Why?" said she.

"I would go to New York and see this new play," said Lisbeth, still swaying back and forth in the splint-bottomed rocker. "Olivia was a country parson's daughter, and so are we. I should like to see my own counterfeit presentment on the stage."

"Nonsense," said Polly. You had a deal better come here and help with these grapes."

"It's such wretched business to be poor!" said Lisbeth. She was a sparkling little creature, after the humming-bird type of damsel, with yellow hair curling from her forehead, intense hazel-brown eyes, and a small red mouth with dimples hovering shyly in its unlighted corners. "Just look at us, Polly, you and me, two girls of nineteen and seventeen, that ought to be enjoying ourselves and having a good time, and here we are, washing and scrubbing, and turning wretched rags of dyed silk, and cleaning faded ribbons, and counting every pound of rice and every potato! Even these wild grapes, Polly, that you and I gathered down in the edge of the swamp, we shouldn't venture on the extravagance of preserving them, if Mrs. Deacon Blodgett hadn't offered to supply the sugar and spice. Oh, I do so hate this life! Even Brisket the butcher thinks he can insult us with impunity."

"Yes," said Polly, thoughtfully, "we mustn't order any more meat at present."

"But we must live," flashed out Lisbeth.

"There is salt mackerel," said Polly, "and eggs, and vegetable soups, and Mrs. Hall always sends us a nice cut of pork and some fresh sausages when they kill their pig. Oh, we shall get along somehow, Lisbeth; anything is better than to repine."

Lisbeth looked up with sparkling eyes.

"Polly," cried she, "why don't they increase papa's salary? Six hundred dollars a year is a shameful pittance for such a man as he."

Polly shook her head over the grapes.

"Papa isn't a young man any longer, Lisbeth," said she, "and he isn't as modern in ideas as Mr. Crocus."

"But he's such a learned man," cried out Lisbeth, shaking the yellow mane out of her eyes. "And his sermons, Polly, they make me cry, sometimes, so deep and so solemn, and go down into one's heart so! Six hundred dollars a year, Polly, for such work and study as that!"

"There is no doubt," said Polly, soberly, "that clergymen are, as a general rule, very much underpaid in this country."

"I do wonder," cried Lisbeth, impetuously, "if there is any other race of men imposed upon as country ministers are! Stale, ugly words, Polly. I never, never, will marry a—"

"But, papa!" Lisbeth had caught at his coat-cuff to reclaim him, temporarily, from the abysses of theological argument.

"Yes, my dear," looking absently at her.

"Do you think he'll stay to dinner?"

"I shall invite him, my dear, most assuredly."

Lisbeth's countenance fell. "But, papa," faltered she, "there's nothing but barley-soup."

"We will serve it with the good old-fashioned sauce of welcome, my dear," said the Reverend Mr. Fenn, with a grave, sweet smile, "and I doubt not it will suffice."

Lisbeth flounced out of the room with heightened color and quick, impatient breath. "Papa's an angel," said she, herself; "but angels never were adapted to get along in this works-a-day world." She put her golden head into the parlor-door for an instant. "Papa is very busy with his 'Thirdly,'" said she, with a roguish twinkle in the eyes that were dancing and laughing, "so there's your new hat; and there," as she laid down a packet of groceries, "are your gloves; and here," rattling out the potatoes, "is my last chance for a new blue neck-tie! And I do hope, Polly, that they'll give the missionary the worst kind of a dyspepsia."

"Lisbeth!"

"Well, but I do," saucily retorted the girl, as she turned to put away her hat. "And— Oh, Polly!"

Polly turned around with a start, at the changed tenor of her sister's voice.

"What is it, Lisbeth? You're not ill?"

Lisbeth, with a glowing face, pointed to the little wooden cupboard in the wall, which, extending through from parlor to kitchen, in butler's pantry fashion, was used as a general repository for books and papers. And then, for the first time, Polly perceived that both doors were slightly ajar.

"Polly," muttered the girl, hoarsely, "he has heard every word! He couldn't help it." And flinging her hat in one direction, and her scarf in another, Lisbeth fled up the narrow wooden stairs to her own room, and threw herself, sobbing hysterically, upon the bed.

"It's my tongue," sobbed Lisbeth, "my wretched, chattering tongue. Papa always warned me against giving loose to it; Polly always told me it would get me into trouble. Oh, dear, dear, what must he think? how can I ever look him in the face?" And with this doleful resume, Lisbeth buried her hot face in the pillows, and cried harder than ever.

It seemed an age to her, but it was in reality little more than half an hour, before Polly came flattering up the stairs like a sweet-browed guardian angel.

"Lisbeth," said she, "dearest, don't fret—you meant no harm. Get up and braid your hair and come down-stairs. Dinner will be on the table directly, and papa is asking for you."

Lisbeth sat up and plashed the damp fringe of yellow hair out of her eyes. "I shall not come down, Polly."

"But you must, dear; papa would be very much vexed."

"Never!" cried Lisbeth, with a fresh burst of tears; "never!"

But the country parson himself presently came to the rescue, with mild eyes and a firm, gentle voice.

"No member of my family must be lacking in courtesy to a guest," said he, taking Lisbeth gently by the hand; and the poor child was led shame-faced by into the kitchen, where the table was spread, and Polly stood smiling at its head.

"Mr. Vincent," said the parson to the tall stranger, "this is my youngest child."

"I am the black sheep of the family," said Lisbeth, hanging her head, "and I'm very sorry, sir, and I beg your pardon."

"I pray don't mention it," said Mr. Vincent, in genuine distress at the sight of the mortification of this yellow-haired lassie with the deep hazel eyes and the red, sensitive mouth.

And what a dinner was ever—and here let us mention that Mr. Vincent ate with a frank will an excellent appetite, as if no lurking shadow of the threatened dyspepsia disturbed his digestion; the country parson had taken his guest into the study, Polly put her arm around Lisbeth's waist, and drew her out under the morning-glory vines, where, by this time, the blue and rose-tinted cups had all folded themselves into tight little parallelettes, and hidden behind the leaves.

"Lisbeth," said she, "I've got good news for you."

"Nothing can be good news any more," said Lisbeth, with a fresh burst of tears.

"Oh, but listen," soothed Polly. "Do you know who this Mr. Vincent is?"

"A—missionary, I suppose." And poor Lisbeth spoke the word as it was a dose of quinine.

"No, dear, he's the Bishop's secretary. And he has heard of papa's learning ways (and we talent, and he has come to offer him a parish near New York, with twelve hundred dollars—only think of it, Lisbeth—twelve hun-dred dollars a year, and an assistant. We shall be rich, darling, and dear, dear papa will have a little rest and ease in his old age.

"It can't be true," said Lisbeth, vaguely.

"But it is," cried Polly; and then the two sisters began to cry and sob, with happy incoherence, in each other's arms.

"Is it possible," cried Polly Fenn, "that it is a whole year since we came to Morehan Rectory?"

It was a year. Once more the with grapes were scenting all the woods, once more the golden-rod held up its torches of flame along the course of babbling brooks, and Polly shaded her eyes with one hand, as she stood in the doorway and watched Lisbeth come lightly along the garden path, with the yellow sunshine tangled in her hair, and an unwonted moisture in her deep eyes.

"What have you done with Mr. Vincent?" asked Polly, demurely.

"He is walking down by the falls, with papa," said Lisbeth, coming up to her sister's side, and slipping one arm through Polly's. "And, Polly—"

"Well, dearest?"

"I—I have something to tell you."

"Couldn't I guess it?" said Polly, laughing. "No, Lisbeth, don't turn your face away—I know it all, darling. Believe you, and you have promised to be his wife."

Polly said Lisbeth, "I think you must be a fortune-teller. But, oh! I am so happy! I can hardly believe that it isn't all a dream."

"But, Lisbeth—"

"Well?"

"I thought you were never, never, going to marry a—"

Polly, but Lisbeth's soft little hand pressed over her sister's mouth, and her pleadingly uttered, "Please, Polly, don't," stopped the sentence ere it was finished.

And Polly was merciful, and didn't.—Harper's Bazar.

A PANAMA newspaper tells the following story of the sagacity of a dog: "When the dog wishes to cross the river where alligators abound, he goes up the stream a great way off and barks with all his might. The alligators go there and wait for his getting in to go across. The dog knows what he is about. When he sees from the number of snouts above the water that his enemies have all gathered to the feast, he runs down the bank as fast as he can and swims across before the alligators are aware of the trick that has been played upon them."

THE Rev. Dr. John Hall said in a timely way yesterday that no right-thinking man or woman would be ashamed of cheap or worn clothes, provided nothing better could be afforded. He might have added, with equal truth, that any person ought to be ashamed of putting more money into his clothes than he can afford. Nearly the silliest way of wasting money is to employ it in dressing solely for the sake of appearance or for what other people will think.—N. Y. Post.

A Canary Taught to Produce the Music of a Waltz.

Swinging in a gilded cage in the cozy parlor of Mrs. C. W. Carpenter, whose husband is the proprietor of the Continental Hotel in Newark, is a handsome yellow canary bird. While it looks like an ordinary bird, behaves like an ordinary bird; but listen to it for a second, and you will hear a tune, occasionally varied by genuine bird warblings. "Dick is about four years old," Mrs. Carpenter said yesterday, "and, when he feels like it, will sing the German waltz, a few notes of which you just heard, through correctly. He has a mate down stairs that sings nearly as well as does Dick; but he is mouting ugw, and don't sing. Dick has also been moulting, and isn't in good condition. When he is, he will sing that waltz by the hour, but, whenever he makes a mistake, he will break into a most comical warble, and then begin again. I wish he would sing now. Perhaps we can get him to." Thereupon Mrs. Carpenter played the waltz on an organ, using a stop that gave a tone much like a bird's. She played the waltz through, and as she ceased the bird began and sang the waltz nearly through; but it made a false note, and then warbled sweetly. The organ sounded again, and the bird sang again. This time Dick sang the waltz correctly, and at the end of his song gave himself great airs, evidently proud of his skill. "How did we teach him?" said Mr. Carpenter, in answer to the question of the reporter. "Mrs. Carpenter took Dick when he was just off the nest, and put him into a dark room, where he saw no light and heard no sound. Then daily she played the waltz to him, two or three times a day, for fifteen or twenty minutes every time. At the end of a month or two the bird began to sound a note of the waltz, then another. Soon it combined them, and after a time he whistled an entire strain. It was nearly a year, however, before his education was complete. It requires considerable patience to teach a bird. These birds are a cross between a linnet and a canary, and are a heartier bird than a thoroughbred canary. I would not like to part with either of my birds. When the Kellogg opera troupe was here, Miss Kellogg was delighted with Dick's performances. She said if she owned him she wouldn't take $1,000 for him."—N. Y. Sun.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Prof. Arnold, of Rochester, N. Y., denies that tomatoes produce cancer.

—The present Mrs. Ole Bull is the second lady that has borne that name, and is an American.

—Mr. Arnold Hague, a son of the Rev. Dr. Hague, of Boston, has been engaged by a Chinese Viceroy to look for minerals in the mountains of Northern China.

—Mr. W. W. Corcoran, the Washington banker, has presented the State of Louisiana with an historical painting of the Battle of New Orleans, by a celebrated French artist, and costing $20,000.

—The Rev. Robert Collyer says that the story of the Yorkshire Post, about his meeting with an old fellow-laborer in England and leaving a rich host to go home to dinner with him, is only a piece of imagination.

—Mr. Lewis Swift, the Rochester astronomer, who is a hardware merchant in that city, was standing in his shop the other day when several pillars with shelves attached, loaded with iron bars and other pieces of hardware, fell over. A blade of a grain cradle struck his head, but he says that though painful the wound is not dangerous. He was standing so that he could see the falling timber and forward him or he must have been killed.

—"A few years ago," says the Cleveland (Ohio) Leader, "Mr. W. J. Hoyt, American Consul at Greece, married the daughter of the Greek Minister at London. She was a woman of the rarest beauty and accomplishments, and the wealth and rank of her father made her a belle in London society. Her marriage with the American diplomat was regarded by her family a mesalliance, and she was discarded by her father."

—A fourth operation has been performed on the Rev. Dr. W. I. Budington, the pastor of the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church, to remove the cancerous trouble which first began to annoy him last spring. A cancer was cut from the inside of his lower lip first, and then it made its appearance on the outside of the face, and a second time cut out. It assumed, at first, the shape of a smoker's cancer, but, as Dr. Budington did not smoke, it was decided that it was an ordinary cancer. At first it seemed to have no malignant tendencies; but when Dr. Budington was in London it reappeared, and skilled physicians operated on it again, and a third time it was thought that it would not reappear. Since his return, however, it has again developed on his lip, and has also presented itself in a malignant pustule on the side of the neck. The operations are attended with some pain, but the presence of the cancer is more painful than the operation.—N. Y. Sun.

A Woman's Logic.

"It is useless to take medicine. I shall feel better to-morrow. Besides, I need the money to get that lovely new hat. My old one is such a fright, and people will look more at my bonnet than they will at my face. I will wait till I feel worse before I spend any money for medicine." Such women purchased and fifty other feminine sexisms in the form of ribbons, laces, stockles, etc. Meanwhile the lady's face becomes every day paler and lifeless, and her body weaker, until disease has gained so firm a foothold in her system, that the most thorough, and oftimes a long and tedious, course of treatment is necessary to restore her to health. Ladies, attend to your health before you even think of apparel. A fresh, blooming face in a plain bonnet is much handsomer and far more attractive to your gentlemen friends, than a pale-pern, diseased face in the most elaborate and elegant hat that human could devise. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is everywhere acknowledged to be the standard remedy for female complaints and weaknesses. It is sold by druggists.

Plunging Over the Falls.

An illustration of the fact that the resistless rapids and mighty waterfalls do not destroy all life drawn into their terrible power was witnessed by the Sun correspondent on Saturday last, in company with Mr. Joseph S. Vick and wife, of Rochester, and two ladies from Brooklyn. Luckily, the rapacious guardians of Nature's great water works were not aware of the extra exhibition, or doubtless a heavy fee would have been demanded.

After viewing the Canada Fall from the point near which Terrapin Tower once stood, we were about to ascend the bank on Goat Island, when one of the ladies discovered what she called three large birds close to the water's edge, under the shadow of the bank, about 500 feet above the brink of the fall. An examination through a field glass showed the birds to be three large geese. Two were white, and the other was gray. They stood quietly gazing into the turbulent rapids, occasionally stretching their necks and dropping their heads.

On the attention of our hack driver being called to the geese, he said that they had fallen asleep on the river above the rapids, and, floating down, had been awakened by the increasing of the water and roaring of the falls, in time to effect a landing. "They are so terrified," he continued, "that anyone could catch them by hand."

"Why not try and capture one for your Sunday dinner?" suggested the correspondent.

"Guess I will," replied the hackman, as he started off up the bank.

He had crept up to within about six feet of the geese when first a white one walked slowly into the stream. The hackman stood still a second or so before taking another step through the bushes, as he raised his right foot, which was nearest the river, to proceed, the gray goose craned his neck and followed the white one. At once the hackman could take three more steps, the last was a gone goose. Slowly it paddled its way after the others out into the fatal rapids.

One of the Brooklyn ladies, placing her hands over her eyes, exclaimed, "Oh! the poor things; they will be drawn over the falls and killed. I can't look at them."

But the fascination could not be resisted. The lady, like the rest of us, watched the geese with intense interest on their perilous voyage.

At first the geese stemmed the current with apparently little difficulty; but as the man stepped to the edge of the river they worked farther out into the rapids. They were soon caught in hillocks of water and spray, and turned helplessly around. Then, getting their strength over, they endeavored in vain to stay their downward course. The geese made no effort to fly, the water frequently sending them down until only their long necks were visible above the surface.

At the point where we stood, a narrow bridge had been thrown out into the stream, a few feet from the edge of the fall. The end over the river rested on a large, flat rock. We stood on this rock, watching the apparently doomed geese. From the rock a long, gradual curve in the river, the outer end being caught under another rock which projected out of the water. The water swept the under part of the log its entire distance. The torrent has stripped the bark off, and worn its surface as smooth as the mast of a ship.

As the first white goose reached this log it struggled bravely to keep from being drawn under and over into the thundering abyss. It was a frantic effort. The broad, web feet of the goose, as it turned its head up stream, were straightened out, offering no resistance to the remorseless current. The goose was tucked under sideways. Swinging partly around, the goose took the awful plunge with head turned in a straight line over the fall.

Next came the gray goose. Like the first, it made a brave fight at the log. Going under backward, it stretched its long neck in agony toward us on the rock. Its throat showed a long line of flaming red. It looked as though the crimson blood were bursting up through the bill. The goose toppled over the fall backward, with neck and head erect, without emitting a sound. In fact, all three went down the rapids and over the falls in silent terror.

The last goose also struggled bravely to keep on the upper side of the log, but was soon drawn under, and followed its companions over the cataract. It went over head first, the same as the other white one. As our eyes followed the goose in its descent, we were surprised to see it dart out from the water and spray and fly safely down into the dark green water, hundreds of feet below the white foam that covers the river for some distance under the falls. The other white goose was then observed flying further out over the river. It soon settled down and swam toward his companion. Watching them through the glass, we saw them rubbing their heads together. Nothing whatever was seen of the gray goose after he went backward over the fall.

Mr Joseph T Cox, in his planing-mill, on the edge of Genesee Falls, said that he once saw from his mill windows a small drove of cattle go over Genesee Falls. All that went over backward and sideways were killed, and those that plunged over head first got out alive. He also saw an old lady fall from the railroad bridge while a train was crossing. The old lady went over the falls near where Sam Patch took his fatal leap. She was found alive on the island a short distance below the falls, but she soon died.—Niagara Falls Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Civilizing the Red Men.

An interesting document was yesterday received at military headquarters from Gen. Miles in reference to the condition of the Cheyenne Indians at Fort Keogh, M. T. Gen. Miles states that about a year ago he was allowed to retain thirty Indian scouts and their families, but that since then this number has been reduced to twenty; these included twenty-nine men, forty-four women and thirty-nine children. To these he calls special attention. The General states that twenty-seven months ago these Indians were leaders in the Battle of the Little Big Horn. They were fought by the troops in the winter of 1876-77. On March 23, 1877, seven of them surrendered at Fort Keogh as hostages. Then followed the surrender of 300 on April 22, and the remainder (of "Crazy Horse's" band) moved south and surrendered at their agencies. Their war ponies were sold for $2,459.20. With half this money Capt. Ewers purchased a very fine herd of eighty-five young cows and heifers at about $10 a head, and $400 worth of seeds for planting. The cattle were branded and distributed among the families. The ground for the garden was broken up late in the season, yet they have raised 1,000 bushels of potatoes, 400 of turnips, 30 of corn, 15 of onions, 18 of parsnips, 10 of carrots, 1,000 melons, 1,000 head of cabbage, 4,000 summer squash, 500 Hubbard, 300 pumpkins and 300 dozen of cucumbers. Beside these, they raised a large quantity of beans, peas, radishes and tomatoes. Their winter crop has been stored in two large root-houses, built by the Indians themselves. The General says that the head-warriors of the Ogallalah-Sioux and Cheyenne could have been seen gathering their crops, and lifting logs with which to secure them for the winter. This work has been done under the supervision of one soldier, George Yonkum, a plain, honest Illinois farmer-boy, who came out as a recruit last spring.

These Indians have solved three problems: First, that the wildest of them can be made peaceable and loyal. Second, that they can be made self-sustaining, as these men received nothing from the Government that they have not earned, and have supported themselves by their own industry. Third, that the representations that have been made about our "barren lands," and which have done so much harm, have been made without foundation; and that, in addition to the pastoral and mineral wealth of this country, it is rich in agricultural resources.

Gen. Miles adds that what can be done with these Indians can be done with all the Indians of the Northwest, and at one-tenth what it is now costing the Government, and without any additional legislation on the subject. The only money these Indians have received from the Government was a small amount they had been paid as enlisted scouts. In this connection, the General says that he wishes to speak of the Indians' services. One of them was killed while conveying dispatches, four were bodily wounded in the engagements with the Sioux and Nez Perces. They have discovered and guided the command to two hostile camps, they have carried dispatches in every direction, and at great distances, and, as guides, have been invaluable, as their knowledge of the country, timber, water and old Indian routes of travel, etc., has aided the troops in establishing direct freight, mail and telegraph lines of communication. Gen. Miles recommends that the $1,224 he holds, received from the sales of ponies of Indians who were sent south, be sent to some officer who will make a judicious use of it for their benefit.

Gen. Terry forwarded this report to Gen. Sheridan, and called especial attention to the report as being a valuable one, and added that "the remarkable success which is reported indicates not only an unexpected capacity for improvement on the part of these Indians, but very wise and skillful administration on the part of Col. Miles." And Gen. Sheridan's indorsement is that "this is in confirmation of the belief, as expressed in my annual report, that with kind treatment, administered with steadiness and justice, the Indian can be redeemed and made self-supporting, and in an incredibly short period of time as compared with the opinions usually entertained by the general public."—Chicago Inter-Ocean

—For some time an enmity had existed between Joseph Fulton and George Hurston, two prominent young men of Stokes County, N. C. The parties met at Walnut Covo, a few mornings ago, when the quarrel was renewed. Fulton suggested to Hurston to retire to a grove near by, and have a settlement of their difficulties. This plan was adopted, and the two men, procuring pistols, went to the place agreed upon. The distance of thirty paces was stepped off, and the men took their places. No seconds were present. Two rounds were fired. The ball from Hurston's weapon struck his opponent in the face, inflicting a fatal wound.

—A sad case of destitution, recalling the "Song of the Shirt," is reported from Norfolk, Va., where, a few days since, a Mrs. Elliott dropped dead from weakness while running a sewing machine, in her desperate effort to support a sick husband and several children. All the furniture had been pawned, except a mattress and the sewing machine.

The Turkish Slave Code.

The Turkish slave code recognizes no fewer than six gradations of slavery, which differ wholly and importantly from each other, and form so many steps from absolute bondage to freedom. Of these the first is that of kenleki or unconditional servitude, in which the slave is the mere chattel of the master, with no legal rights of any kind except to protection from personal abuse. But the condition even of this class has little or nothing in common with that of the North American or American negro. The law absolutely protects their life, and, as I have said, forbids undue severity or punishment; beside which, they are as a rule kindly treated, and except in the case of slaves born such or purchased in infancy, are entitled to their liberty after nine years' service. The second category is that of the mazzoum, which consists of slaves who are permitted by their masters to work or trade on their own account. These may acquire property, and even themselves own slaves, and at their death may devise their estate as they please, their children, too, being mazzoum, like themselves. The third class consists of mukiatche, or slaves who have received a contract (kitabe) for purchasing the their freedom shall take place in the event of some specified condition being fulfilled, such as the payment of an agreed sum of money or the performance of a particular service. During the term over which these contracts extend the holders of them can be sold nor hired out, and may also purchase slaves of their own, to whom they may grant similar privileges to those enjoyed by themselves. But if the condition be not fulfilled within the term the slave lapses into the state of kenleki. The fourth grade is that of mudebirre, or slaves who have received a deed (debbir) which confers on them deferred freedom, to take effect on some stipulated contingency, such as the death of the master, his return from a pilgrimage or some future event. The slave thus gifted may be sold, but his sale carries with it the irrevocable condition, and in no way bars his right to liberty the moment the specified event happens. The fifth class, called mutebberiumukiatch, combines the double advantages of the third and fourth. The sixth—umm-i veled, "mothers of children"—consists entirely of female slaves whose children have either been acknowledged or adopted by their owner, and thus become free; they pass at once into the class of mazoum, and while they may not in the meantime be sold, attain their full liberty on the master's death, if not enfranchised before it. The fact that a large proportion of the female slave population belongs to this class may argue more for Ottoman benevolence than a savage opinion of the female conclusive as to the many privileges and the general kindliness of the treatment which Turkish—as contrasted with Cuban and Brazilian—bondswomen enjoy.—Traders' Magazine.

An Afghan Superstition.

The English soldiers just now camping near the frontiers of the Ameer, about to overrun his dominions, may this week have the opportunity of witnessing a remarkable festival that occurs in those regions once in the full moon of November. Dr. Leitner, who acted as interpreter for the British officers during the Crimean War, and afterward explored Northern India, gave me an account of this festival, which consists in the people scattering lighted torches in the direction of a place called Gilghit. They thus celebrate a legend that a Cannibal King once ruled over that region, who kept his kitchen supplied with the children of his subjects. This King bore a charmed life, and all attempts to destroy him failed until heavenly beings took pity on them, and one of their number became incarnate on earth for the purpose of delivering them. This incarnate deity was assisted by the daughter of the tyrant, who discovered the secret of his charmed life, which was that he had not a heart of flesh. The tyrant's heart was made of snow. Consequently the incarnate armed the people with torches; with no other weapons, they surrounded the castle and the icy heart perished amid that circle of warmth. The incarnate and the fair maid who found out these secret of the tyrant's heart—she is now a Madonna—feigned together over the realm they had made happy for a long time, and their story is now told in torches. What I have seen of British officers and soldiers does not lead me to hope that there will pay much heed to this Oriental torch gospel. Yet they might well do so.—London Cor. Baltimore Gazette.

Terrible Contest with a Lunatic.

The details of the suicide of William Rawson, son of Horace Rawson, of Craftsbury, show that there was a narrow escape from a far bloodier tragedy. William came home at his usual night, and, with abusive and profane language, said to his father, "One of us has got to die." He then sprang upon his father and mother, and a sister, who was in her chamber overhead, and heard his language, came to the room and found them in a struggle upon the floor. They both did all they could to assist the father to gain advantage over his infuriated son, and this done, the sister ran out for help from neighbors. Mr. Rawson could not hold his son down, but got away from him and stepped into his room and Mrs. Rawson into the front hall. Then William went to another room and returned with a gun, which he had previously loaded with a heavy charge of shot, and called for his sister. Then came a fearful struggle between him and his mother, while he tried to open the hall door, but she held the door with desperate strength until he wrenched off the door-knob on his side, when he went up the back stairs to his mother's room and burst open the door. Not finding his mother, he came down the front stairs. Meanwhile Mrs. Rawson sought refuge in a closet, where she thought she could secure the door against him. Mr. Rawson started out for help, and the son, seeing him, called to know where he was going, but received no reply, when William, thinking all had gone, placed the gun to his ear and discharged the contents through his head, the shot coming out of the top of his head and lodging in the floor above. He lived several hours, but remained wholly unconscious to the last. There had been nothing but good feeling between father and son. He had been home that day, and after supper assisted his father evenly the milking and other work about the barn, and seemed as usual, except he laughed a great deal. He was thirty-one years of age, and had never been profane or rough, but had for years had times of being gloomy, and was occasionally insane.—Burton (Vt.) Monitor.

A Hint to United States Judge on the Jury System.

It requires all the veneration which age inspires for this mode [trial by jury] of dispensing justice, and all that eminent men have said of its value in practice, to prevent our natural reason from revolting against the system, and especially some of its incidents. If a cultivated Oriental were told for the first time that a Nation, which claims to lie in advance of all others in its love of justice and its methods of enforcing it, required as one of its fundamental principles of jurisprudence that every controversy between individuals, and every charge of crime against an offender, should be tried by a mass of the most unlearned learning in the law, often without any other learning, and that neither party to the contest could protest until all the twelve men were of one opinion in his favor, he would certainly be amazed at the proposition. Before long the European Nations inferred much with him in their estimate of trial by jury. It has been well understood and received the careful consideration of the Continental Powers for great many years, without being adopted by any of them, in the form that we have it. Russia, England, Italy and Spain have been made to introduce it in some modified shape, but I think it safe to say that it has not in its essential Anglo-Saxon form received the approval of any people except those of that race. In the days when Kings exercised arbitrary power, they was much more cautiously, liberty-loving Englishmen, a valuable barrier against oppression by the Crown. But in this country, where the people are sovereign, the jury is but too often the mere reflection of popular impulse, and the safety of an innocent man is more frequently found to depend on the firmness of the Judge than the impartiality of the jury. Still, it is probably wise that no man shall be convicted of an infamous crime until twelve fair-minded men are convinced of his guilt. I am also forced to admit, however, that even in civil cases my experience as a Judge has been much more favorable to jury trials than it was as a Counsellor. And I am bound to say that an intelligent and unprejudiced jury, when such can be obtained, who are instructed in the law with such clearness, precision and brevity as will present their duty in bold, are rarely mistaken in regard to facts which they are called upon to find.—Justice Miller, before the New York State Bar Association.

A Race With the Flames.

THE Yankton Press tells of a lively race the General and L. A. Carney had with the recent prairie fire. Traveling upon an unfrequented trail, they came close to the line of the fire, which extended miles northwest and southwest, and was edging slowly northeastward. When there were within twenty rods of this line the wind suddenly increased and shifted some 20 deg. toward the east and from the west, sweeping the flames directly upon them. What was five minutes before a harmless fire, to be reviewed with perfect ease, was now a mass of continuous flame, often ten or fifteen feet high, and sometimes twenty feet across. It roared like half a dozen passenger trains at full speed. They sprang from the wagon and fired the grass, but it made very slow progress, and in turn burned ten feet ahead when a whirlwind came down the line with a high gale. Their only chance was flight, and they sprang into the wagon and whipped up their Texas horses for a race northward to some higher stony ground. The ponies understood that game and went readily. It was all done in less time than the telling. The very cause of danger was at last the means of safety. The whirlwind, which was twenty rods wide, passed by. It had changed all the adjacent currents of wind. This laid flat/stood the wind ahead and prevented the fire from spreading, and now that it had passed it gave a chance to stand in its rear upon the ground where the grass was thin, and within ten minutes of the first apprehension of danger they were among the smoking cinders on burned ground. The whirlwind went over the bluff and down the river bottom, filling it with fire in places above the level of the bluffs, and sending up a column of black smoke which must have been over half a mile in length.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—An English journalist died recently from the effects of slipping on a bit of peel, and falling on the pavement. He hurt his knee and erysipelas set in.

—Fifteen years ago the wife of Dr. Chapel, of Charlottetown, P. E. I., got a divorce from him. With alimony of £30 a year. Rather than pay this he went to jail, and there remained till his death, a few days ago.

—Mr. Guy Carlton, a robust farmer, seventy-five years old, living near the Village of Wyoming, N. Y., has bought his coffin and has it ready for use. He also has ready for erection a solid marble block, chiselled in the shape of a dwelling, with doors and windows. The block will be put over his grave to symbolize by its form and solidity the last long dwelling of man.

—A drunkard in Sacramento, warned by a touch of delirium tremens that he had carried his drinking altogether too far, resolved to reform or die. He decided this purpose in several friends, locked himself in his room, seated himself in an easy chair and put a loaded pistol on the table within reach. The blood will be put over his grave to symbolize by its form and solidity the last long dwelling of man.

—Mrs. Smith, of this city, found a fishhook among her husband's papers and determined to destroy it. So she resolved to burn the fishhook up, and for this purpose cast it into the stove. The next morning Mr. Smith in digging out the "clinkers" found the fishhook in the ball of his thumb. After the surgeon had removed it, he put it into his vest pocket, with an idea of showing it to his acquaintances. He sauntered down street, when an expeditious colored woman swept by him and was soon seen bringing to with "a round turn." The hook had worked its way partly out of the pocket, and its point caught in the bodice of her dress. The situation grew momentarily interesting to the bad boys who infest the thoroughfare, and they hailed Smith's efforts to liberate himself from Liberian custody with hoots of delight. Finally the dusky female swung clear and went dashing down the street. A policeman showed her arrest, but was arrested himself by a fishhook in the hollow of his hand. The hook is now in the station-house, waiting to have something done with it. Any person desiring a permanent situation to take care of a fishhook should make early application to the proper authorities. —New London (Conn.) Telegram.

Watching a Millionaire's Grave.

Beginning last night (the day of the funeral), a watch will be kept on the grave of Mr. Thomas H. Powers, to thwart any attempts that may be made by grave-robbers. The watch will watch by night and two by day, the orders of Mrs. Powers being that their vigil shall not cease for two years. To the tombstone will be attached a key to a watch, locked in a case that the men will carry. The watch must be wound every day, so that the key can be used. Mr. Powers was a millionaire, especially if the hives are surrounded by straw in which they can harbor. The best preventive is to have the hives so tight that they can gain no admittance. For the sake of ventilation it is not well, however, to have the entrance closed air tight. Therefore, place a piece of wire gauze over the entrance of the hives that may be in the cellar, or that may be buried in the ground; this will exclude mice and sparrows. Put over the top of the hives that are covered with boxes, as mentioned above, fasten a piece of wire gauze over a hole in the above the bottom board, so that the bees can just pass under the edge of it, while the mice are excluded.—Rural New Yorker.

—A cheap lot of manure may be made of an old carcass of a horse or cow, which may often drawn away to the woods to pollute the atmosphere. Do not do this, but put down four or five loads of muck or sod, roll the carcass on it and sprinkle it over with quicklime, covering over immediately with sod or mold sufficient to make, with that already beneath, twenty good-sized wagon-loads, and you have from twenty-five dollars' worth of the best of fertilizers in less than a year, and no trouble in preparing and applying the crop. One beauty of this plan is, the animals need not be moved far away, there being no smell to that stench. All animals which you are unfortunate enough to lose can be utilized in this way and be made to go a great ways toward paying for the manure. Small animals, such as sheep, calves, dogs and cats can be treated in the same manner as the above, an average amount of soil or muck proportionate to their size. When possible, place three or four in one pile, as the labor of covering would be but little more than for one, but it is not much work to make a heap of any animal, however small or large. —Turf, Field and Farm.

A PARAGRAPH in Staunton, Va., possesses a valuable breed of ducks which can fly a distance of fifteen miles and sold and will next morning be found at home.

Ladies, Delicate and Feeble.

Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet, are caused by that terrible drain that is daily and hourly sapping your life energy, destroying your womanly health, and rendering existence a burden. Dragging pains, sinking sensations, internal fevers, rendering you irritable and nervous to excess, are but symptoms of what is to follow. That menstrual derangement, if not actually turned to account for cold. Manure is usually thrown out of the stables into irregular heaps, which are exposed to the rain and snow, and are trampled upon by cattle. Thus it becomes either a sodden mass or is frozen solid, and it so remains until spring, when it is needed for use. This is the worst possible method of using it. The soluble portions are washed out of it, or are locked up in it in a condition in which they cannot be brought into a state of usefulness. The best method of keeping it is, on the contrary, one by which it may be kept in a sufficient condition of moisture for the most rapid decomposition, but no more than that, and in such a shape or position that it cannot be trampled upon or disturbed so as to disturb the process of fermentation. The chief trouble is to prevent the manure from freezing; if it is kept in a state of constant heat, the water which will fall upon it will never exceed the amount which will be required to make up the loss from evaporation, and to prevent too much dryness, and consequent "fire fanging," or dry rot, by which the quality will be seriously impaired. The method followed by the best farmers is as follows: At this time, when the contents of the yards are in a good condition, moist enough from the rains, and partly rotted, they are gathered into a square heap, built up evenly at the sides and slightly hollowing at the top. One end, or each end, as additions may call for it, is left broken down and not built up. Then the fresh manure as it is taken from the stables is thrown on the ends of the heap, and in a few hours begins to ferment and heat from contact with the already fermenting mass of the heap itself. Or if the cold is severe, and the ends of the heap are frozen on the surface, this is broken up, the frozen portions are thrown into the body of the heap and the fresh manure is thrown directly against the warm interior part of the heap. The manure from cow-stables, pig-pens, horse-stables and poultry-houses should be mixed together as new additions are made; and with the quicker fermentation thus secured help to bring the colder portions into a state of decomposition more easily and more rapidly than if kept by themselves.

When the heap becomes too large for convenient handling in the yard, it may be drawn to the field where it is to be used. It may be a question if it would not be best to spread it directly upon the surface of the land, rather than a second heap of it. In our own practice we have done both, and incline to the belief that the former is the better way.—N. Y. Times.

COLIC is one of the most fatal diseases horse flesh is heir to. The symptoms of colic are readily detected. The animal scrapes with his forefeet, kicks at the belly, and shifts about, lows around, smells the floor, crouches, puts the nose to the flanks, lies down, rolls, remains for a time on the back, and breathes heavily throughout. Until there is a ready and safe means of relief and cure in every homestead in the land—a means and remedy that's been brought forward at a meeting of the London Farmers' Club, by Mr. Frederic Street, a gentleman of great skill and experience in the training and management of horses. When a horse shows the symptoms of an attack of colic, apply at once, says Mr. Street, a horse cloth, or woolen rug wrung out of boiling water, to the belly and up the sides, and cover with another couple of cloths to retain the heat. As they cool renew the cloths as often as needful. A large bran poultice, as hot as can be borne, is equally good, if they can retain the heat longer.—Western Agriculturist.

ANY person, man or woman, can float without any difficulty. If a man finds himself suddenly immersed, not knowing how to swim, he will escape drowning provided he has the presence of mind to lie at full length flat on his back, clasp his hands across his chest or behind his back, or they may be placed on his hips, his face turned toward the zenith, his head well back in the water, his feet together and under water, except his toes, and keep perpetually looking at the sky right over him. In this position he may float for hours at ease and in perfect safety; but stir or thrust up one of his hands, and down he goes.—Scientific Exchange.

EVERY farmer may not be able to reach the maximum of production, yet he can make his land produce what he needs and what an accommodating market will pay him well for, when he has it in excess of home wants. No farmer in the land, however poor his soil may be at the outset, has any excuse for not making every acre contribute to his own and the general good. —Prairie Farmer.

Management of Manure.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—An equal quantity of fresh spirits of nitrol and lemon juice will take stains out of marble. Put in a bottle and shake up well; wet the spots with the mixture, and in a few minutes rub with a soft linen cloth till they disappear.

—In performing housework the hands are frequently put into both hot and cold water. To prevent unpleasant effects upon the skin, use a few drops of glycerine frequently in wiping the hands, and it will restore the soft natural texture of the skin.

—Brass cooking pans should be cleansed inside with brick and vinegar, then rinsed thoroughly, dried at the fire and wiped with a clean cloth. White enameled pans require only a little soda and warm water to keep them clean and free from grease.

—During the winter mice are sometimes troublesome guests in the apiary, especially if the hives are surrounded by straw in which they can harbor. The best preventive is to have the hives so tight that they can gain no admittance. For the sake of ventilation it is not well, however, to have the entrance closed air tight. Therefore, place a piece of wire gauze over the entrance of the hives that may be in the cellar, or that may be buried in the ground; this will exclude mice and sparrows. PUBLIC NOTICE.

I, JOHN HANNAS, being a blacksmith by trade, has often felt the want of some means whereby I could before shoeing a horse, find out what was the best for my advantage. This induced me to make many experiments with different remedies, which failed to give the prospect of success. It was on one of these occasions that I discovered the wonderful effects of Electro Silicon and immediately purchased it.

I had a defect in three of my fingers, which were bent inwards, so as to be useless as a means of prehension. By the action of the Electro Silicon, that I always have with me, the sinews of those fingers were made supple, and I can now use them as well as ever. I have worked for all it is worth, and I can say, positively, that I never knew Electro Silicon to fail in any case. Especially do I find it good for the horse, and it has proved itself one of the very best remedies for all kinds of lameness, whether in man or beast. I have also used it in my family with great success.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, DEC. 17, - - 1878

THE PRESIDENT IN 1880.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec 12, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The recent experience of this illstarred section of country over which the weather clerk seems to have turned on the celestial faucet, and then gone off on a ten day vacation, suggests to me a few remarks on the subject of that institution whose doctrines are swayed by the weather clerk's vicar general in Another, Gen. Myers, and which is commonly known as the Weather Bureau.

An Englishman on his native heath is never without an umbrella. "You never know, you know," what trick an innocent looking sky will play you there in its dankness. But an American reluctant at the thought of being chained to an umbrella. In the rush with which he always conducts his business, this wagon nuisance interferably in the way of arms or legs, while the mental anxiety generated by the attempt to remember where the article had been left, as he appears empty handed at home, is enough to drive his religious training into a corner where it will not interfere with a few left-handed remarks. If it really rains, he accepts his umbrella as an uncomfortable accompaniment to his overshoes, for no Yankee has yet got ahead of nature to the extent of inventing a patent cloud turnover to make it rain the other way. It is only the carrying of the wobbling apparatus all day with no signs of moisture after the first half hour in the morning, that brings about the lamentable state of profanity hinted up.

Nowadays the several morning papers publish "probabilities" as to the state of the weather, and umbrella carrying has been reduced to a system. For this thanks are due to our Signal Service. The practical working of this organization is under government control, and is familiar to few outside of those immediately interested. With a central office at Washington, there are about two hundred branch stations scattered over the country. At all these stations three observations are taken daily, the results of which are telegraphed to Washington. Upon the arrival of each set of dispatches a chart is made out, and forwarded to the principal cities. The tridaily reports to headquarters include the state of the barometer, thermometer, hygrometer (showing the moisture in the atmosphere,) direction of the wind, velocity of the latter in miles and pounds of pressure, the kind and amount of upper and lower clouds, rain, hail, snow or sleet, as the case may be, and such other information as may carefully describe the atmospheric surroundings of the locality whence the reports come.

In New York City the office is situated on top of the Equitable Insurance building. I paid a visit to the superintendant in his sky parlor, the other day and was particularly interested in the little machine which indicates the rate at which the wind may be blowing at any time. On an elevated place where the breeze is unobstructed, are four hollow hemispheres, cups so arranged as to catch the wind. The cups are at either end of two rods which are crossed at their centers, and rest at that point on a registering rod connected with a disc which in its turn is connected by electricity with a registering drum in the office of the superintendent. The disc on the rod is so arranged that it makes one revolution as each mile of wind passes. The electric current is broken by points coming in contact with each other during a revolution of the disc, causing a pencil in the registering machine to indicate the fact upon a drum covered with paper and kept revolving by means of clock-work. The paper over this drum is divided by lines with spaces representing hours and fractions thereof. The pencil follows a straight line until the magnet is released, when the lead point makes a mark to the left, and immediately flies back again. The spaces between these marks indicate, of course, the velocity of the wind per hour. The large stations are supplied with presses and type, and early in the morning (three or four o'clock) bulletins are printed and mailed to postmasters in the vicinity. These are called "Farmer's Bulletins," and are posted where they can be readily examined. The New York office sends out over seven hundred of these each morning. The apparently difficult problem of determining a storm centre, and the direction in which the storm is travelling, readily solves itself when a few points are understood.

As reports are received at the Washington office, red lines are drawn upon a chart connecting places having the same atmospheric depression. High pressure always moves towards low pressure. The storm centre is at the locality where the pressure, as indicated by the barometer, is at its lowest point. The wind is created by the denser air surrounding the centre rushing in to fill the space, the wind becoming weaker and weaker as the distance back from the storm centre increases. The signal stations having been informed by telegraph of the centre, the approach of wind is foretold, and by knowing the temperatures, the amounts of moisture and cloudiness at the different localities the state of the weather accompanying this wind can readily be ascertained. Several storm centres often occur at the same time in different sections of the country, and then there's the whirl's his name to pay. Sea-faring folks consider winds as storms, whether accompanied by rain or not. The single weak point in the service is the absence of means for recording the state of the weather on the Atlantic.

But even this fault might be remedied, and I believe a plan has, I believe, already been proposed, by which a vessel kept in mid-ocean could tap the Atlantic cable and forewarn both Europe and America of approaching disturbances. That something of the kind will eventually be perfected there can be no doubt, and when this is done it cannot be very long before the whole subject of weather knowledge will be reduced to an exact science.

I presume your readers have by this heard rumors at least of the great sugar controversy which has been set on foot here and in Washington, through the persistent attacks upon the New York sugar refiners, which for months past have been through a portion of the press, and through various other channels ostensibly by some American importing houses, but really by an association of Cuban sugar planters and dealers, who are working from "behind the scenes." The charges made against the refiner that they increase the government and adulterate their sugars. Both of these charges are utterly baseless, and as to the latter, its absurdity is so evident that it hardly seems possible that it should gain credence anywhere: and yet I learn from the largest wholesale grocery houses in the city that the story of adulteration has in some quarters acted their customers into refusing to buy American refined sugars. Truth, they say, lies at the bottom of a well; but in this case it is bound to come to the surface. And when the truth is known the animus as well as the falsity of these rumors will be plainly seen. If the agitation continues I shall devote a letter to the subject including a description of the processes of sugar refining. RADIX.

Not long since the President and Secretaries Evarts and Thompson offered General Grant the courtesies of the steamer Richmond which sails in December for a tour of the Indian and Pacific Oceans. A dispatch has been received from Gen. Grant accepting the courtesy. The Richmond will visit Ceylon, Cangkok, Manilla, Hong Kong and the principle ports of China and Japan, and will be gone at least a year. Gen. Grant will take passage at Ville Franche. This ship is to go through the Suez canal, and spend nearly a year in explorations in a commercial and scientific exploring tour along the coasts of Asia and among the islands of the Pacific ocean, including British India and China and Japan and the islands of Sumatra, Borneo, Australia, Van Diemen, New Guinea, New Zealand, etc. Gen. Grant has been formally invited by the secretaries of State and of the Navy to take the trip, and has replied that he will probably accept the invitation. And, as there will probably be Democratic journals news and ignorant enough to set up the cry that this will be traveling at the expense of the United States, I say at once that Gen. Grant is appropriating to cover such expenses, but let us explain in advance that all the United States offers him. Grant is the use of state-rooms on the ship. The expense to the United States will be nothing. Gen. Grant and his family will fare with the officers of the ship, who provide their own messibles. He will pay for everything he has except the use of so much room in the ship. And his presence on the ship may be of much service to the expedition in procuring for it international courtesies and privileges from the various countries visited, and enabling the important objects of the expedition to be more speedily and successfully accomplished.

Political.

The Democrats are afraid Mr. Blaine will stir up Ben Hill to making another speech.

The Democratic Memphis Avalanche facetiously observes that "the lawyer of the Democratic party ought to be a combination of the cypher dispatch and the three-paper ballot, with the Inside Reform if necessary."

The Columbia, S. C. Register says that if Grant is elected in 1880, "the mightiest civil war in all the tide of time will break out." If it did, Grant would soon break it in again.

John A. Logan seems to be the man for the Senate from Illinois.

The Richmond Dispatch says that if the South will mind its own business and let the South mind theirs there will be no trouble. That is a resumption of the ratchious chorus "Let us Alone," of 1861.

The Baltimore Gazette wants the cypher business pretty well to the bottom, as in 1880 the Democracy can carry no dead weights, political cripples, or statesmen with reputations out of repair.

The Cincinnati Enquirer reports interviews with leading men of both political parties throughout the entire South, showing the first choice among the Democrats for the Presidency to be between Thurman and Hendricks. Among the Republican candidates Grant fairly leads: next Blaine; while Conkling follows at some distance.

There would be one mighty good thing for General Grant if he would accept the throne of Bulgaria. His Majesty couldn't understand a word his subjects said when they came around the palace and waited for collectorships and postoffices.

The Utica Republican says that the way to remember was to resolve, and that the way to stop the Southern outrages is to stop them.

The report that Tilden is trying to get control of the Democracy of New York, is confirmed by his taking possession of one of the Democratic strongholds, the Auburn State Prison.

"Let us pray" reverently said a California Methodist clergyman, who had been warned that his auditors in a remote settlement were profane and rough, and as he said so he laid two revolvers on the desk which served him as a pulpit. Never had he preached to so attentive and silent a congregation.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered Liver. The result of these diseases upon the minds of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only obtain some proper medical advice, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheuvront, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine has been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many Physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an estimated fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, etc., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 bottles were sold last year without one complaint of consumptive (by just one name). Regular size 75 cents. Sold by your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheuvront.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

In the Senate, on the 3d, the standing and other committees existing at the close of the last session were reëlected. A bill was introduced authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue in exchange for United States notes a coin certificate of deposit of the denomination of ten dollars, or any multiple thereof not exceeding $500, bearing 3.65 interest, and convertible into 4-per-cent. bonds. A resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information relative to the amount, denomination and kind of silver coin which has been received in payment of customs dues since the beginning of the current fiscal year. Mr. Matthews spoke in favor of the Texas Pacific railroad bill. A resolution was agreed to for a Commission to investigate into the economy of the present use of the enrollment, from the Sunday Civil Appropriation bill, passed at the last session, of the clause relating to the Hot Springs Commission. . . . Bills were introduced in the House: For restoring the silver trade dollars into standard silver dollars; repealing the Resumption act, to punish executive frauds to make void the Judge's legal tender; to stop the further coinage of such dollars; in relation to the excursions from Germany of a subsidized American citizen—Julius Bauner; for the admission and register of foreign-built ships. The Military Academy and Fortification Appropriation bills were passed.

In the Senate, Messrs. Ferry, Davis and Randolph were, on the 4th, appointed as the committee to inquire into the expediency of issuing Hot Springs cleans from the enrolled Sundry Civil Appropriation bill at the last session. Bills were introduced—authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, in redeeming legal-tender notes, to pay 75 per cent. in gold coin and 25 per cent. in standard silver dollars; appropriating $5,000,000 for improvements on the Mississippi River. A resolution to take up the Texas Pacific Railroad bill was rejected—yeas 19, nays 22—on the ground that it would lead to a long discussion. In the House, resolutions were adopted—calling on the President, for information relative to communications with the United States Minister in Mexico on the subject of commercial relations between the United States and that country; calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the cost of Government money in any National State or Territory since the 30th of September and November, 1878, other than deposits made by Disbursing Agents. A bill was passed, with an amendment, correcting the error in the enrollment of the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, in relation to the Hot Springs reservation.

In the Senate, on the 5th, the Special Committee on the Yellow-Fever Investigation was announced as follows: Messrs. Burnside, Matthews, Lamar, Paddock, Conover, Garland and Jonas. A resolution was adopted calling for information relative to the deposits in the Treasury to the credit of the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company. Changes were made, by unanimous consent, in the Standing Committees as follows: Mr. Wallace on Committee of Appropriations in place of Mr. Eaton; Mr. Eaton to take Mr. Morgan's place on the Committee on Patents, and Mr. Morgan to be on Committee on Foreign Relations in place of Mr. Wallace. Mr. Ferry was excused from service on Mr. Hot Springs Commission Committee. Adjourned to the 9th. In the House, the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bills were reported from the Committee on Appropriations and referred to the Committee of the Whole, and made the special order for the 15th. An investigation was ordered into the charges affecting the character of certain employés in connection with the vote to replace $5,000 bonds of the District of Columbia. Resolutions adopted—for the appointment of a Yellow-Fever Commission; calling on the President for information relative to the relations of the United States and the German Empire relative to the expulsion of Julius Bauner, a citizen of Chicago, from that Empire. . . . Adjourned to the 8th.

A PREAMBLE and resolution were submitted in the Senate, on the 9th, by Mr. Windom, setting forth that the United States Patent Office "has become an institution of oppression" and directing the Committee on Patents to consider the expediency of some other mode of compensating inventors in place of the present system. A resolution was agreed to requesting the President to furnish the Senate with copies of the reports of United States Marshals and other officers, and such other correspondence as he might have relative to the recent elections in Louisiana. . . . Bills were introduced—by Mr. Edmunds, in favor of the bill to amend the Enrolled Statutes relating to Presidential elections, and to provide for and regulating the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions relating thereto. Resolutions were agreed to—instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire into the expediency of providing for the revision of existing laws regulating intercourse with the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory; requesting the President to transmit to the Senate copies of correspondence respecting the immunity of the diplomatic agents of foreign Governments from judicial proceedings against them while received, entered and residing in the United States. Among the bills introduced in the House were the following: To compel National banks to receive the standard silver dollars as gold coin is value to the gold coin of the United States; to make minor or subsidiary coin legal-tender for all debts due the Government, repealing the Silver Remonetization act; to restore the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution; to make silver standard dollars interchangeable with gold. A resolution was offered and referred for a holiday recess from the 21st of December to the 6th of January. A message was made and debated—yeas, 130; nays, 69 (less than two-thirds in the affirmative)—to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution declaring that the legal-tender quality of the standard silver dollar shall be maintained and preserved, and that any discrimination against them by any National Bank refusing to receive them and treat them as legal tenders shall be deemed a defiance of the laws. The Committee on Appropriations for the Army was directed to investigate the method of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases.

DOMESTIC.

ON the 3d, Gen. Sherman submitted to the Joint Commission on the Transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department a number of official documents verifying his previous statements regarding the advisability of the transfer. The General described the suffering of the Indians, and said "the army should either be transferred to the Interior Department, or the Indian Bureau to the War Department. Under the existing management, the Government is very heavily taxed and the poor Indian driven to the wall."

DELEGATES from seventeen States were present at the Commercial Convention which met at New Orleans on the 4th. Resolutions were almost unanimously adopted—urging upon Congress to take immediate favorable action upon the Texas Pacific Railroad bill; declaring that the aid already granted by the General Government to the Northern Pacific Company should not be withdrawn, and that the Union and Central Pacific Companies should be held to the strictest compliance with their charters and the laws regulating them.

THE large boiler in Hayden's rolling-mills, at Columbus, Ohio, exploded, on the afternoon of the 5th. Two persons were killed and several others more or less seriously injured. The mill was destroyed.

A MASS-MEETING was held in New Orleans, on the night of the 5th, at which resolutions were adopted expressing the deepest sense of gratitude to the people of the entire country for the spontaneous and generous aid extended to the residents of that city during the recent epidemic. They declare that never before has any people been the recipients of so grand a charity, and never can its impressive lesson of humanity be forgotten: that "no difference of political creed can weaken, and no effort of designing politicians sever, the which bind us by the most tender and sacred memories in bonds of a National brotherhood, one and indissoluble."

A NEW counterfeit of the standard silver dollar is said to have recently made its appearance in Chicago. A lady drawing some money from the Sub-Treasury in the city, on a pension, received one of the pieces, and it was not detected until offered at one of the Chicago stores. It is described as being an exact imitation of the genuine dollar, the only difference being that it weighs seven-tenths of a grain less. The piece is made of composition heavily plated with silver.

DURING the eleven months of the present year, ending on the 30th ult., the number of immigrants arriving at the Port of New York was 75,147, against 52,566 for the same period last year, and 65,320 for the same period the year before.

A YOUNG lady named Hotham, daughter of a well-known resident of Illiliah, Pa., was left at home, on the evening of the 7th, with two younger sisters, aged nine and twelve respectively. About half-past eight o'clock her brother Joseph returned home from a spelling-bee, and undertook to frighten his sisters by passing himself off for a tramp, and succeeded so well that his eldest sister shot him dead as he stood on the porch in front of the door. She was quite prostrated after receiving the fatal shot were "My dear sister."

THE Post-House in Washington County, Iowa, was burned on the afternoon of the 8th, and five of the twenty-six tenements perished in the flames.

FIFTY houses in the business portion of the Town of Adams, Mass., were destroyed by fire a few days ago. Loss, $200,000; insurance, $160,000.

IT is reported that there are now nearly, if not quite, fifty cases of leprosy in Lafourche, La., all originating from one person suffering from the disease, who, some twenty years ago, settled on Bayou Lafourche.

SEC'Y SHERMAN made his seventy-fourth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds, consols of 1865, on the 9th. The amount is $10,000,000—interest and principal payable March 9, 1879.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Central Executive Committee of the National party, lately in session in Washington, issued an address to the people of the United States, reviewing the rise and progress of the party, and expressing confidence that the National candidate for the Presidency in 1880 will be elected. The address announces the late action of the New York Clearing-House, and says the contest is to be determined by the supremacy and the people, between bank-bills based on untaxed bonds and a Government legal tender. An appeal is made for organization in the interest of the National party, in every school district, city, town and ward in the country.

THE Republican candidate, Hobart B. Bigelow, has been chosen Mayor of New Haven, Conn., and the Greenback candidate (Mr. Whitman) has been elected Mayor of Gloucester, Mass., by a majority of 478 over the Republican nominee.

AT the recent city elections in Los Angeles, Cal., the workingmen elected their entire ticket—a short-term Council.

THE Executive Committee of the National party effected a permanent organization, on the 4th, and elected Hon. Frank O. Darwin, President, and Thomas J. Durant, Secretary and Treasurer. Headquarters have been established in Washington.

ON the 4th, as Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, was ascending the stone steps leading to the National House of Representatives, on crutches, he slipped and fell, giving his knee a painful wrench, which is likely to confine him to his bed for some time.

DR. A. C. BARSTOW, of Providence, R. I., Chairman of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and representing the Congregational Church in behalf of the education and conversion of the Indian race, tendered before the Joint Commission on the Transfer of Indian Affairs to the War Department, on the 4th, and said that, in his judgment, the proposed transfer was unwise, and if effected, would certainly work adversely to the Christian operations now in progress. E. M. Kingsley, of New York, a member of the same Board, and representing the Presbyterian denomination, said we could not run bayonets and spades for the Indians, rather than an army with swords and rifles.

SUPERVISING-ARCHITECT HILL has been suspended, by order of the President, until his trial upon the indictment recently found against him by a Chicago Grand Jury. A Mr. Frazier has been appointed his successor ad interim.

OVER one hundred delegates, claiming to represent Trade-Unions in all parts of the country, met in Philadelphia, on the night of the 5th, to form a National political organization. They decided to call a National Convention, to meet about the middle of January next, either in St. Louis or Chicago.

SEC'Y SCHURZ made a statement before the Joint Commission relative to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, on the 6th. He said he disclaimed any personal desire to retain control of the Indian service under the Interior Department. He then gave in detail his reasons why he thought the proposed transfer unwise and impolitic. He thought the Indians were entitled to humane treatment, and that could only be rendered through the processes of civilization, education and kind treatment; this the military were not fitted to promote. He denied very emphatically the red-tape system of reporting Indian outbreaks, which it had been asserted was required under the present administration of Indian affairs.
